Another program available through some lenders and brokers is an expanded 100-percent loan that allows a buyer to borrow in excess of the value of the property, including the cost of closing. In this case, the credit and borrower profile would need to be exemplary and the interest rate may be adjusted slightly to allow for the additional risk. The loan for this buyer is mostly secured by the real estate with a small percentage unsecured. Why would an individual wish to put no money down on a house and borrow for their closing cost? It may sound old-fashioned, but the sooner a buyer "buys" into the opportunity for the American Dream, the quicker the positive results will begin — the building of equity, the accumulation of tax benefits, and the improvement of credit. Borrowers who use these niche programs may wonder, "Is this the program for me?" If you have access to funds for a down payment in the form of savings, gift or otherwise, be sure that your loan officer provides a comparison of the costs and benefits of the program, as well as the costs and benefits for any other program you may be researching. Often, this is a personal choice based on your savings habits and your goals.

Selectman helps to make history

Fred Koed plays key role in Florida recount

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Fifty years from now, when historians are reliving the dramatic Presidential election of 2000, they'll be able to turn their sights to Cohasset Selectman Fred Koed.

On Monday, Koed will submit his electoral vote for Vice President Al Gore when Massachusetts casts its ballots for president as part of the Electoral College. And that vote will come a month after Koed flew down to Palm Beach County to count some other famous votes, known as the Florida presidential punch-card ballots.

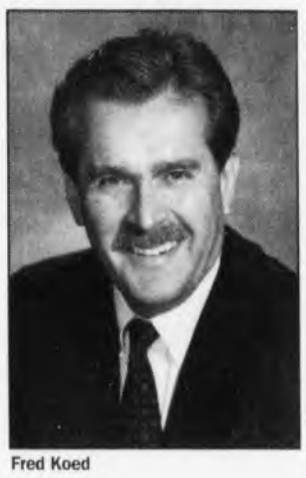
From Nov. 13, to Dec. 1, Koed was the head tally clerk for the Democratic party in Palm Beach during the famous hand recount authorized by the Florida Supreme Court. It was Koed that kept track of all the precincts' results and then argued the undecided votes with Republican counterparts before the county commissioner. It was Koed that finally determined that Gore had gained 215 votes in Palm Beach County, though a few hours past the deadline.

"In one sense it was like all the other recounts; the basics are the same," said Koed who has been involved in, by his count, 20 recounts in Massachusetts. "But this was the big time. This wasn't a selectman's race, this was a presidential election."

"For me, it's nice after all these years working on recounts, which is a kind of thankless job in many senses, to finally have a nice skill set that allows me to be a witness to history."

— Selectman Fred Koed

Koed was tapped by Boston attorney Dennis Newman, who was hired by Palm Beach County Democrats to oversee the recount. Newman knew Koed from a number of recounts the two had worked on across Massachusetts, such as the Phil Johnston/Bill Delahunt recount in 1996, and the Bob Hedlund/Christy Mihos recount in 1990. Koed's first recount was in 1984 when there was a dead-heat in a Cohasset selectman's race between Mary Jane McArthur and Doris Golden.



Fred Koed

"I have a lot of experience in recounts. Recounts are a specialty within itself. Inside that, is keeping track of the results," Koed explained. "For me, it's nice after all these years working on recounts, which is a kind of thankless job in many senses, to finally have a nice skill set that allows me to be a witness to history."

He had a nice view, too, sitting right next to the commissioner's table. "One of the judges said I had the best seat in the house," Koed recalled.

He was called by Newman at 2 p.m. on Nov. 13, and was on the Road rage is on the rise

Sixteen incidents since April

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset is not exempt from the recent phenomenon known as road rage. Since the police department started keeping track of such incidents in April, 16 calls have been received from drivers who feel they have been the victims of road rage. Nine of these instances have happened in just the past two months.

"It's been reports of aggressive driving to the point where someone feels threatened," explained Cohasset Police Sgt. Robert Jackson. "We don't have an official definition but when we see it or hear it, we know what it is."

So far the incidents have ranged from tailgating, to verbal confrontations, and in one instance, running someone off then road.

"It's more than someone flipping the bird and then driving off," said Officer Christy Tarantino. Tarantino told of a time he responded to a call

Who's the town's citizen of the year?

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

In keeping with its seven-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement — the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the mean by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

The deadline for nominations for the 2000 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 5. Please see the nomination form on page 15. The form may be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931.

This is not a popularity contest. Following the close of nominations, a selection panel — after reviewing the names submitted by poring over the nomination letters and comments — will select the 2000

Mother wants to stop 'living out of boxes'

This is one story in an ongoing series as part of CNC's Gifts of Hope campaign.

Stacey is seeing the face of homelessness first hand.

The 29-year-old has been homeless since Jan., 1999, moving from place to place since then. Now, Stacey is living with her 4-year-old daughter at the Carolina Hill Shelter in Marshfield. She also has a 5-year-old son who currently lives with her mother and father.

"He's doing really well in school right now," Stacey said of her son. "It would be unfair to pull him away from that right now.

"It's just a waiting game for me. I'm on about 80 different lists for public housing — some of those lists have two-year waits, and I'm even on a list that has a 12-year wait. I want to have a decent life, and I want to have a house where I can live with both of my kids. But it's just about waiting right now."

Stacey's personal road has been long and frightening — in addition to adjusting to a constantly changing life of moving around, Stacey is also on the run from an abusive relationship. That is where her whole story begins.

"This all really started when I got involved with this man about five years ago," Stacey said. "He had a problem with his temper."

She explained that at the time, she was living in an apartment on the South Shore. Her boyfriend with the "temper" actually lived with her at that time. Eventually, Stacey and her boyfriend were evicted from that place because she lost her job and failed to pay the rent.

But in August 1998, she found a

Growth committee

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan has put out the call for citizens interested in serving on the town's growth and development committee. The committee is expanding its citizen members from three to five. Interested citizens should contact the selectmen's office at 383-4105. Appointments will be made at the selectmen's Dec. 19 meeting. The committee also includes two selectmen, and one member from the conservation commission and planning board.

CRC chastised

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan scolded the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation for allowing surveyors to trespass on private property.

Callahan said an Elm Street resident looked outside and saw surveyors walking all over his property. When questioned the surveyor said he worked for the town.

Selectmen authorized a letter from Town Manager Mark Haddad directing CRC and its consultants, the Cecil Group, to "cease and desist from this action."

"In the future, if you or the subcontractor of the Cecil Group wish to conduct any surveying work with the Town of Cohasset, you are to first seek permission of the Board of Selectmen," Haddad stated.

Callahan said selectmen so far had expressed support for CRC and a willingness to work with the corporation that is leading the village/harbor revitalization effort. But he emphasized that the surveyors do not work for the town.

He said he expects a public apology and said the contractors should be fired.

But selectman Michael Sullivan said he could see how this could have happened. And selectman Fred Koed said the board should get an explanation before it rushes to judgment.

Water leak

Hagerty committee chairman Russ Bonetti told selectmen Tuesday that he and Paul Pattison noticed water oozing out of the septic tank in the Hagerty property parking lot off Parker Avenue. They thought it was due to heavy rain or high tides, but as it turned out, a pipe apparently froze and broke or water was left on in the Hagerty house that filled the septic tank. The water department turned the water off from the outside, Bonetti said. He urged selectmen to revisit the fate of the Hagerty house now that plans for the harborfront park at the site are going forward. Bids for Hagerty park improvements will be opened Jan. 11.

"The property is not being maintained," Bonetti said about the house, which is leased to the nonprofit Cohasset Lobster Lab, an educational research facility.

Bonetti said the water was turned on in the house last summer when the building was being painted.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to talk with lobster lab director Kevin Ulmer and, if necessary, ask him to attend a meeting to give the board an update on upgrades to the house.

"Wherever the water was, it was evidentially going into a drain, thank God," Bonetti said. "But it may have gone over a few floors before hitting the drain."

Delivery trucks

Trucks making deliveries to the Red Lion Inn are not only blocking James Lane but are also backing up over fencing at the perimeter of the gas station, said Citgo station owner George Roukounakis.

Roukounakis wondered why there is no loading dock at the inn.

Selectman Merle Brown said he witnessed a delivery truck that had difficulty getting into the lane next to the Red Lion. And Selectman Michael Sullivan wondered how an 18-wheeler would ever get up the narrow lane.

Selectmen asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to look into the matter and invite Red Lion officials in if necessary.

"That would give us occasion to meet the new manager and say 'Welcome to Cohasset,'" Callahan said. Anthony Ambrose recently became managing partner at the inn-restaurant complex.

Town licenses

Selectmen will invite all establishments that hold licenses to a public hearing Dec. 19 to discuss potential conditions on their licenses. Conditions could involve a range of issues such as hours of operation, parking, seating capacity, fencing dumpsters, snow and ice removal, noise, deliveries and more.

All license holders will receive a copy of the proposed conditions before the hearing, Town Manager Mark Haddad said. Town counsel will look over the conditions before they are sent out, selectmen said.

The board is looking at making conditions more uniform for all license holders.

Water commission

Selectmen will conduct interviews at 8 p.m. Tuesday to fill a vacancy on the water commission created when Chip Muncey resigned because he is moving out of town. So far Glenn Pratt of King Street is the only person to come forward. Whoever is appointed, will fill the post until the town election in April when the seat for one year remaining on the unexpired term would appear on the ballot. Town Manager Mark Haddad said citizens interested in the post should notify the selectmen's office by the end of the week.

Speed limit

Responding to a suggestion from Donald F. Hines, 41 Forest Ave., selectmen voted to post a 30 m.p.h. speed limit on Cedar Street.

In a letter to Town Manager Mark Haddad, Hines said the street has numerous curves, blind drives and on trash days heavy traffic. He said he was concerned for his grandchildren who live on Cedar Street and have one of the "blind" drives.

Flu clinic slated

The Cohasset Board of Health and the Social Service League will conduct a town flu clinic for people age 50 and older, or younger people with chronic illnesses such as asthma or emphysema. The clinic is scheduled from 10 a.m. to noon, Saturday, Dec. 9 at the Town Hall auditorium.

Please wear a short-sleeve shirt. The clinics are for Cohasset residents and are free of charge.

For more information, call the Social Service League at 383-0771.

School project phasing plans are in final stages

A preview of what lies ahead

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

They don't deny it's going to be disruptive, dirty and noisy. But perhaps the saying about how the end justifying the means, holds true.

School Building Committee Chairman Rob Spofford and Gene Raymond of Strekalovsky & Hoit, the project's architects, don't dispute that the impending $40 million school expansion and renovation project could be disruptive for the town's students in grades 4-12. But they are sure whatever discomfort students, faculty, administrators and parents go through over the next three years will be well worth it in the end.

"While it might be disruptive, looking at the long view, it will benefit many generations of Cohasset schoolchildren," Spofford said in a recent interview with the Mariner. "It's a terrific thing."

Starting in March, the Cohasset School Department will embark on a three-year journey that will add 30,000 square feet of classroom space to the 40,000 square-foot Deer Hill School, and an additional 75,000 square feet to the 140,000 square-foot middle/high school.

Current status

Town Meeting approved the school building plan in April, and since June, Spofford, Raymond and the rest of the building committee have been reviewing plans and creating the project's bid proposals.

"We've been looking at various things with the schools' principals, department heads, coordinators, asking what do we want to see in there, what type of door handles do we want. We've also been spending time on driveway issues at the Deer Hill, those types of scenarios," explained Spofford. "We want to find out what is the best we can get."

The committee has also closely scrutinized other public works projects, especially school construction projects in the area, in order to get a precise estimate on costs. As a result, Spofford said the middle/high school won't go out to bid until the second week in January, with the Deer Hill bids available the following week.

"There are two things we need to make sure," explained Spofford. "One, that we have the right cost estimates, and two, that the planning document is 100 percent complete and accurate."

The committee has also had two outside engineering and architectural firms volunteer to look at the plans and make any critiques they feel are necessary. Raymond characterized the outside look as an "independent technical review" where the groups will look at the structural plans as well as plumbing and electrical setup, and make suggestions. It's up to the committee to incorporate those thoughts.

Spofford also said he feels the town has an advantage by having Strekalovsky & Hoit on its side.

"One reason we chose them, besides being local [from Hingham], is they have extensive experience in renovation projects," said Spofford. "And they have a successful track record of bringing projects in at budget."

But all the planning in the world can't eliminate unforeseen problems.

"There will be things that come up," Raymond pointed out. But Spofford added that by taking the additional time on the plans, he "hopes to minimize" any of surprises.

State reimbursement

Already the school project has had one victory. The building committee was able to beat the June filing deadline of Massachusetts' school construction assistance program, whereby the state reimburses local cities and towns a certain percentage of costs incurred during school construction or renovation projects. The Deer Hill and middle/high school both made the list of projects to be reimbursed, though not for a number of years.

Spofford said the costs for the Deer Hill project will be reimbursed first. "It received a slightly higher priority because it was driven by enrollment and renovation needs," he explained. The middle/high school project was driven by program needs. "Enrollment takes higher priority," he said.

Cohasset lucked out by filing when it did, said Raymond. "Subsequent to the June filing, Cohasset's reimbursement rate dropped," he said. Cohasset is slated to receive 60 percent reimbursement for the entire project. If Cohasset had filed under the new rate, it would have lost out on thousands of dollars. "It was a good thing [the town] brought it forward and got in approved," Raymond said. "There will be a significant amount of savings by getting it in June."

Phasing

The tricky part of the project is that the committee is forced to do more shuffling than a Las Vegas blackjack dealer. At just about every phase of the construction, especially in the middle/high school, some part of the building will be closed, or under construction, or being moved, for basically the next three years.

Starting this winter, Spofford said the school building committee will hold a number of informational meetings for parents to outline the project's phasing. The meetings will get into both the general, such as construction deadlines, and the specific, such as where parents will be able to pick up their kids after school.

Spofford was able to give the Mariner a broad sneak-preview of life in the schools over the next few years.

When work begins on Deer Hill School grounds in March through the end of the school year, students will remain where they are in the existing building. The following year, the 2001-2002 school year, students will again remain in the current building, but in the midst of a construction site. During that year, the new addition will be constructed. Spofford said the work site will be fenced off as the new wing is built, to prevent curious students from getting too close to the action. But from July 2002 until December 2002, the current building will undergo a complete renovation, touching every aspect of the structure. Though the project won't "gut" the building, it will feature new electrical and heating systems, as well as a new administrative area, nurse's office, library and expanded cafeteria.

Spofford explained that classes will be relocated temporarily into the new building, as workers make their way around the existing building. Though classrooms will be reshuffled, he said class sizes, both spatially and numerically, will remain the same. He said the phasing plans for both the Deer Hill and middle/high school were designed to ensure the schools stay in the education business. "We asked them [the schools' principals] to sign off on it to ensure we minimize disruption," Spofford said.

Work is expected to take longer at the middle/high school. In March, the library will be relocated to the Dorr-Gymnasium. Once relocated, the existing library will be demolished as a new gym, locker room area, library, cafeteria, art and music classrooms and science labs are built. The library will then be rebuilt once the new athletic complex is built behind the current building. The new gym and library are expected to open around September of 2002.

Once the new facilities open, the old ones will be renovated into their new configurations, such as new computer labs or administrative areas.

The rest of the school will also be completely renovated. All work is expected to be done by December of 2003.

So while work is going on, Spofford doesn't deny there will be some dust and noise concerns.

"We're just going to have to do our best to live with it," he said. "There's no way to eliminate it. It's going to be disturbing for a short period of time."

An architect's rendering of the new gymnasium complex at the middle-high school.

School bids to go out

School building committee chairman Rob Spofford told selectmen Tuesday bids for the $40 million school renovation projects will be available Jan. 8 for the middle-high school and Jan. 15 for Deer Hill on Jan. 15. Bid openings will be conducted at Town Hall on Feb. 13 for the middle-high school and on March 1 for Deer Hill.

"We will then know where we stand," Spofford said. He explained the building committee had done its homework, so to speak, by spending a lot of time with cost estimators.

"We are confident both schools should be on budget," he said.

Spofford said the clerk of the works, Simon Tempest, has been "brought on early" during the final design document stage so he can hit the ground running when construction begins this spring. "The money is well spent," he said and will be recouped at the other end. Tempest served as project manager for the Osgood School project.

CHS Class of 1995 plans fifth-year reunion

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

I LOVE SNOW

Hello Cohasset! Can you believe the holidays are here? It is so nice to feel the weather changing and the anticipation of snow somewhere in the future.(Sorry, Harold!) As anyone who knows me will tell you, I LOVE SNOW! Yes, I know that it is hard to drive in, slippery and heavy to shovel, but it also brings a special beauty to the ground and if you let it, brings out the kid in all of us! When and if we do get a snowstorm this winter, try to get out there and be the first one to sled down a hill, or throw the first snowball or even make the first snow-angel of the day. It is so much fun to watch the expressions of the kids when you are the first to start the fun. Then, think of how nice it will be to get inside, have hot chocolate with the kids and warm up together. It really is a lot of fun, trust me!

HELPING OTHERS

I would also like to send a message to all of us as the winter season gets underway. If you have an elderly friend or neighbor, or someone around you who is sick, now is the time to start thinking of ways to help with the cold weather or a big snowstorm. Maybe they may need some shoveling done or some shopping that you could do while you are already going. Making some soup or holiday treats? Why not make a little extra and share? We all get caught up in our own frantic lifestyles that taking the time to offer something to someone in need or someone who is feeling rather alone, really makes all parties feel good. Sometimes, the hardest thing for a person to do,(learned from my own experiences) is to ask for help when it is needed and by you taking the first step, makes it much meer and easier.

CLASS OF 1995

Hey, is anyone out there from the CHS class of 1995? This class is holding their fifth year reunion at Atlantica on Dec. 22 from 8 -11 p.m. The cost will be $20 and sounds like a wonderful event. They hope to have all classmates attend and need our help in locating some missing people. If anyone knows how to get in touch with Sarena Quemere, Simone Carlisle, Kendra Gray, Jeff Littlehale, Guy Scarpaci and Jen Wilner, please call Candice Buckley at (617) 491-9268 or email her at can@alum.dartmouth.org. Thank you in advance for any help you can give.

BIRTHDAY GREETINGS

Well, we have a few Birthdays to report. Harry Rose, a former Cohasset resident who now lives in Scituate with his mom and dad, Phil and Laurie, just celebrated his 11th Birthday! It is amazing to see how quickly everyone is growing. Happy birthday, Harry!

Also celebrating a birthday last week was Caroline Collins who turned 8 and Zach Strecker, who turned six! Happy birthday to all of you and I hope that you all enjoyed your big days.

One more birthday as well as a congratulations to a special little lady. Miss Cassidy Connolly, whose mom Cheryl (Winn) Connolly is a former Cohasset resident, just celebrated her fourth birthday in her new home in Scituate. Cassidy, Cheryl, Dad Frank and little sister Allyssa, are now living on Murphys Lane in Scituate with their dog named, you guessed it, Murphy.

What a great birthday present Cassidy, a new house! I hope you had a great time celebrating and congratulations to all of you.

GET WELL SOON

I would like to send a get well wish out to Mr. Harry Rose, grandfather of young Harry. Mr. Rose has been laid up for quite a while and everyone wants for him to feel better soon.

NEW ARRIVAL

We have a new little lady in our town! Miss Abigail Delaney Johnson was born last week on Nov. 29 to Jeff and Deb Johnson of Beechwood Street. Baby Abbey's big brother, Jake, called to let me know that she had arrived. Abbey weighed in at 6 lb. 7 oz. and was a whole 18-1/2 in. long. This little girl is surrounded by love and I am sure we will see her around town often. Congratulations, Jeff, Deb and Jake, she is a little cutie!

ON STAGE

I had some wonderful news about a production that is coming up in December! The "King And I" is being presented by the Cohasset Music Department, a program that is very dear to me. Mr. Bryan Marks, the vocal director at the middle/high school is the producer. The musical is directed by Jo-Ellen Wood and choreographed by Sharon Terman. Based on the success of the many years of musicals, this is going to be a huge success, I am sure. The performances are accompanied by a full orchestra and are being performed at the Cohasset Middle/High School auditorium. The dates are: Dec. 15 at 7:30 p.m., Dec. 16 at 7:30 p.m. and Dec. 17 at 2:30 p.m. and tickets are $8 per show. Brian Krupczak, performing as the King and Jackie Dupre, performing as Anna will perform on Dec.15 and 17, and brother/sister, David Ingber as the King and Elizabeth Ingber as Anna, will perform on Dec. 16. This is bound to be a wonderful performance and all who attend will be delighted, I am sure. For tickets, call Selma Ingber at 383-9590 or Irene Barry at 383-1605

SISTER ACT

I had some great news from a family here in town, Mr. Ed Hettstrom and his wife Karen, wanted to pass on some news about their daughters, Erica and Tara. Erica, a junior at Northeastern, is a business major at the school. She is flourishing under the co-op program and has had some wonderful experiences already. Her last co-op was with Tommy Hilfiger shoes in Waltham, where she had the opportunity to go to the Las Vegas and New York shoe conventions. She helped to set up and design the displays and had a wonderful time. Starting this January, she will be co-opping with the TJX company and work as an assistant buyer in the Homegoods store division. She has been consistently on the Dean's List and is carrying a 3.4 average. Erica, this is wonderful news and I know how proud of you, your mom and dad are. Please keep us in touch with your upcoming experiences.

The Hettstroms' younger daughter, Tara is a sophomore at BC. Tara is a psychology major and is doing very well. Tara's 3.8 average earned her Dean's List first honors and earlier this fall, she was inducted in the "National Society of Collegiate Scholars." The NSCS is a highly selective national, non-profit honors organization that recognizes first- and second-year undergraduate students who excel academically and have a history of community service. The society was established on the principle that with scholarship comes a responsibility to develop leadership and a duty to perform service. Great work Tara, again, your mom and dad are so proud of you! I am sure that we will be hearing more great things about these two wonderful sisters.

BAKING BREAD

Girl Scout Troop #4768 really got into the true meaning of Thanksgiving by baking cranberry and pumpkin breads for the Cohasset Food Pantry. They made about 30 loaves and by all accounts, they were yummy. The girls have been doing this for three years now and truly enjoy the baking and knowing that they are making a difference. Under the leaders direction, who are Mandy Burgoon, Andrea Martone and Liz Laas, the girls are a wonderful group. They are Jackie Cahill, Maura Regan, Caroline McElhinny, Olivia Kimla, Juliette Karp, Lindsay Blake, Samantha Burgoon, Gina Giuggio, Charlotte Glick, Katina Martone, Chloe Koines, Alexandra Laas, Emily Runey and McKenna Teague. Great cooking, girls!

DECORATED TREE

Another wonderful troop in town, #4785, decorated tree in the "Festival of Trees" sponsored by Friends of Cranberry Hospices. The four-day event was held this past weekend and the tree was called, "Sugar and Spice." Leaders, Joann Lehr and Shelly Donze said that the girls worked hard making decorations and collecting little girls toys and used those things to decorate the tree. JoAnne says that they chose to do this project for their holiday service because it was fun, but also because it raised money for a great cause. Corporations and individuals sponsor trees at $100 a foot, other groups decorated the trees with donated materials and finally, people came from all over to see the trees. What a great way to make a difference for the holidays and give such joy to all who were able to view the beautiful sights!

HOCKEY RAFFLE

We have some great excitement happening in town with the unveiling of the Cohasset High School Varsity Hockey Teams 1st Annual Holiday Calendar Raffle. Thank you to all who purchased tickets for this wonderful and fun raffle. A prize will be drawn each day during the month of December and started off on Dec. 1 with the first winning raffle ticket being drawn by Valerie King of King Jewelers. Prizes were donated by Cohasset merchants and range in value from $25 up to $100. Proceeds from this fund-raiser will be used to provide equipment and clinics for the Varsity Hockey Team. Additionally, prizes were awarded to the two top selling Varsity players. Junior defenseman TIm Straughn won Bruins tickets for selling the most raffle tickets and sophomore forward, John Durkin received a $50 gift certificate to MVP Sports for selling the second highest number of raffle tickets.

The Cohasset Hockey Boosters sincerely thank the Cohasset merchants who donated items and services to this raffle and all parents, family members and neighbors who purchased raffle tickets and helped make this fund-raiser, such a success. The winners so far are: Dec. 1— a $100 Gift Certificate to Kings Jewelers won by Sean Cunning of Cohasset. Dec. 2 — Michael Hubley of Cohasset, $75 Gift Certificate to Exotic Flowers. Dec. 3 — Sue Thomas, Scituate, a $50 Gift Certificate to Stop & Shop. Dec. 4 — John Naughton of Cohasset, $50 to Poets & Company. Make sure to read next week for some more lucky winners.

BC HIGH FOOTBALL

On Saturday, Dece. 2, BC High won a convincing 35-0 victory in the Division I Eastern Mass SuperBowl at BU's Nickerson Field. Three young men from Cohasset were among the successful team. Andrew Kinch, a senior closed out his four- year career with the Eagles as a lineman on both the offense and defense squads. Greg Smith, a junior, provided key blocking and made several successful carries as a halfback and Jake Morgan, a junior, worked at defensive end. Congratulations to all of you on a job very well done!

Well, that is it for this week. Make sure to send in all of your wonderful news for me to include in our column! Call me at 923-1057 email me at jenpiep@yahoo.com drop off at my house at 622 CJC Highway in the black mailbox at the downstairs door. He ready to suit up as new 'restaurant guy'

Campbell leads operations at Atlantica

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Sitting in the glass-enclosed bar at the Atlantica Restaurant on Cohasset Harbor, Joe Campbell couldn't hide his excitement. It was just five days after beginning his new career as director of operations for both the Atlantica Restaurant and Kimball's By the Sea, and he sat talking about the possibilities ahead of him just hours before his first Friday night crowd came filing through the doors.

"That's the essence of the business, Friday and Saturday night," said the 43-year-old Campbell, the former vice president of operations for the Northeast region of Legal Seafoods, and a Cohasset resident. "The crowds coming in, everyone running around like their hair's on fire."

But as of right now, the 500-seat restaurant was quiet, basking in a bright sunny day with a Rockwellesque 180-degree view of Cohasset Harbor visible through its walls of windows. But if all goes well, quiet days will be few and far between. The hiring of Campbell happened, by coincidence, the same week popular Boston chef Anthony Ambrose announced he had been named the new managing partner of the Red Lion Inn. The hirings should only increase the friendly rivalry between Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide and Campbell's new boss, Peter Roy.

"Competition keeps you stronger. I always welcome new competition in the area," he said. "People have choices [in an area] and they come back."

The move by Roy to bring in a full-time person to oversee the businesses was something he needed to do, Campbell said. "Peter Roy's not a restaurant guy. He wants someone to be there...He wants a more seasoned professional overseeing the operations."

Over the past 20 years, Campbell has gone from working as a concierge at the Hyatt Regency in Cambridge, to a restaurant in New York City, to head of dining operations for Barrett Restaurants' Marina Bay facilities and the New England Restaurant Company. The move could be viewed as a step back — from working in the board room, to working on the front lines dealing with the public — but it's a move Campbell is looking forward to.

"I lost the essence of what running a restaurant meant," he explained about his departure from running a $90 million business last March. "The thing I loved, I grew farther and farther away from."

Though he said the title of "vice president" was nice, it came at a cost, such as having to travel five days a week, and being away from his family. Campbell has a daughter Alyssa, 11, and Ben, 8, and after leaving Legal Seafoods, he could be seen playing baseball with 20 kids every Wednesday at the Little League field. "By taking the time off, spending the summer with my family, it really put things into perspective here," he said. "It really prompted a change."

"It certainly can be the meeting place in town, whether it's for the one big night out a month, or a place people can come down on a Tuesday night because they don't feel like cooking."
— Joe Campbell

He said he wanted to remain in the restaurant business, but now just closer to home. "The talk at social events always come to restaurants, where they've eaten lately, what they liked and disliked. And because of my job, they'd ask me," he said. "The more time I spent here, the more I really did want to be the local restaurant guy."

Luck just happened to fall his way. At the same time Campbell approached Roy about availability for consulting work, Roy was being told by other consultants to bring in a "restaurant guy."

"He contacted me and we started talking in September, and I started [last] Monday."

For the first time in more than 20 years, Kimball's and Atlantica will be operated under the same management team. Campbell was extremely complementary of Kimball's General Manager Jane McCombs, and said he's going to focus more on the hospitality side of the business, which he calls his specialty. "It will be fun. When the guests come in, people will be smiling, they'll have clean amenities," he said. "We're trying to get some synergy, they've been separated for some time. We'll work off each other."

Back at Atlantica, which Campbell will take up 70 to 80 percent of his time, his goal is to restore it to the prominence of times past, invoking the name of the legendary Hugo's, which closed in 1992.

"[The Atlantica] lost its status as a true landmark," said Campbell, who grew up in Hingham and remembers Hugo's well. "There are a lot of new restaurants, but we have something no one else has. Just look out the windows."

Campbell said he has a vision of Atlantica becoming that kind of restaurant again. "People have a natural attraction to eating on the water," he said. "Though through the transitions [from Hugo's, to the Chart House, to Atlantica and a complete renovation] we've lost that. It certainly can be the meeting place in town, whether it's for the one big night out a month, or a place people can come down on a Tuesday night because they don't feel like cooking."

The cooking will now be Erik Stenfors' exclusive role. He had assumed the role of general manager over the summer, but found not enough hours in the day to oversee both the culinary and dining aspects. "He did it out of necessity [become general manager]," said Campbell, "but as a chef, he wants to be involved. He tried to balance both, but found he couldn't stay on top of every single detail. It was too much to ask."

With Stenfors in the kitchen staying "on the edge of the culinary world and honing his craft," Campbell can focus on what he does best. His immediate role is to make sure the right people are out dealing with the public. "If people are happy at work, they will be great with the public, they'll take care of people," he explained. "They have to be here for awhile to make a good business. People will come in and recognize them. That's what will build up the local clientele."

State earns a 'D' in college affordability

It's hard to complain about a report card that holds mostly A's, but a glaring D in a new scorecard on higher education in Massachusetts should prompt concern and remedial action.

Massachusetts aced most of the categories in a state-by-state assessment released this week by the National Center for Public Policy and Higher Education. It is among the top states in the number of students enrolled in college and in the number of students who receive degrees. Students in Massachusetts are among the best prepared in the nation in terms of taking the advanced courses they need to succeed in college.

The D on the state's report card falls in an area that hits home with nearly every student and every student's family: affordability. According to the report:

Families in Massachusetts contribute 27 percent of their income, after financial aid, to attend the state's public four-year institutions, compared to 19 percent in the best-performing states.

Families in Massachusetts contribute 79 percent of their income, after financial aid, to attend the state's private four-year institutions, compared to 30 percent in the top states.

Massachusetts students borrow an average of $4,719 annually to attend higher education. In the top-performing states, students borrow about $3,094 annually.

Much of the state's affordability problem is historical. Blessed for hundreds of years with many of the nation's finest private colleges and universities, Massachusetts has traditionally neglected its public higher education system. Tuition at UMass and the state colleges has long been higher than at public colleges in other states. That, in turn, reduced the kind of price competition that might restrain tuition increases at private institutions.

Massachusetts has seen progress in controlling the cost of public higher education. Over the past decade, state and local dollars for higher education have increased by 28 percent, according to the report. Appropriations for financial aid have been increased 85 percent since 1995. Tuition at the state colleges have actually gone down in recent years, and tuition is free at the state's 15 community colleges and nine state colleges for all students with family incomes of less than $32,000.

But while increased appropriations have allowed the University of Massachusetts and state colleges to reduce tuition, the price of a private education in the state has continued to surge.

Everyone, in every state, complains about the high costs of higher education. One benefit of a state-by-state comparison like this one is that it shows some complaints are more justified than others. Massachusetts' parents and students might not be so resigned to paying top dollar for college if they know students in other states are getting equivalent education for thousands of dollars less. Compared to Harvard, UMass looks like a bargain, but not next to California, where the state's master plan promises free tuition to all residents.

Massachusetts must continue efforts to reduce the cost of public higher education and cushion the cost of college, private or public, for all our families. Opportunities for financial aid can be improved, and tax breaks to ease college expenses should be considered. If other states can earn an A in affordability, Massachusetts can too.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Revitalization

TO THE EDITOR:

A recent letter extols the history and beauty of Cohasset as being attractive to tourists and visitors, and suggests that tourists don't need revitalization to enjoy the town. Who cares? Enhancement of our physical attributes assists in their preservation, and that is of interest primarily to residents current and future, not tourists.

The letter suggests that "we don't need an outside source to tell us what we should do." Well, there aren't any malignant aliens intent on converting the town into Hollywood's notion of New England perfection. The directors of the non-profit Cohasset Revitalization Corporation are residents, as are all the representatives of the organizations that have agreed to provide input (which may be only moderating in nature). The consultants hired by CRC can provide valuable guidance based on their experience with other revitalization projects, and based on their professional training. The seminars have focused on having us tell them what we want to do, rather than the reverse. (Granted, they may digest all the ideas and regurgitate a proposed plan for approval). Admittedly, the sketches on display have some highly imaginative features that have alarmed many, but they are the product of a resident architect, not an "outside source".

The CRC and its backers provide a much needed catalyst to develop plans and seek funding. Trying to dump the task on the selectmen, town manager, the DPW and various regulatory and advisory boards is at best unrealistic, and at worst just a mask for impeding any action except low-cost cosmetics. It's up to responsible citizens to stop carping and provide constructive and practical input..

Water rate hike

Massachusetts American Water Company
75 Terry Drive
Hingham, MA 02043

Gentlemen:

An article in the Nov. 23 Cohasset regarding the Water Company's request for a rate hike states, "Bossung said the uneven increase (in rates) stems from a large increase in capital commitment for service in the Hingham, Hull and Cohasset areas." This suggests that rate payers are expected to help the water company finance its service to new customers thus increasing water company's business.

If this statement is correct it is an outrageous burden on those of us already paying for water here. Whatever we may think of the rapid increase in residential developments in the area, we should not be expected to subsidize a profit-making corporation in facilitating that process.

Sympathy appreciated

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Priscilla Daniels and her children, Scott Daniels, Kim Blakeslee and Stephen Daniels, wish to thank their wonderful family and friends for their kind expression of sympathy and outpouring of love with flowers, visits, food, letters, cards and prayers during Ed's sickness and at this sad time of his death.

Ed's fight to overcome cancer was constant; he loved life and was determined to beat the disease. He was strong and courageous, always with a positive attitude. By nature he was a gentle, kind, peaceful and loving man. He will be greatly missed by all.

COHASSET CARES

The 3 R's (part 2)

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

As someone said in Church Sunday, this is a great time of year. This period from Thanksgiving to Christmas is filled with so much potential... we have so much to be thankful for... but if we can only keep our gratitude pure and uncommercialized ....

A while ago I wrote about the 3 R's — reducing, reusing, and recycling — and I promised a follow-up. While hauling in my daily quota of half a dozen Christmas catalogs (that's an average of six catalogs per day to our mailbox — how many do you get?) just now and trying to recall where I saw the shocking statistics on the percent of our paper supply — our trees — consumed in the production of these ubiquitous catalogs, I said to myself I must continue the columns on reducing, reusing, and recycling before I explode.

What many of us refer to as recycling is really reusing, as in cutting out some of the graphics from these dreaded catalogs and using them in homemade cards, homemade notes, homemade envelopes, or in collages. By the way a collage you make for someone is a tremendous gift. I presented my wife with a customized collage —about her — one Christmas, and tearfully she said it was better than a fur coat (she never would have bought a fur coat anyway, so...) A collage you make for someone takes no artistic talent but bespeaks personalized caring. It's fascinating how arranging graphics and words on a background emits powerful messages. At numerous points in my life I have had folders entitled "collage bits," fodder for subsequent productions. Collages are great teaching devices, too. Try them in a group. At a party? Collages really communicate — whatever you want them to and more that you didn't expect. And they reuse (or recycle) our natural resources — in a meaningful way. Have fun.

Merle Brown and I were at the Osgood School recently under the auspices of angel Maureen Alcott, third-grade teacher, and Merle explained a most convincing example of reuse to the kids with the "recycled" fishing net he uses to keep stuff from blowing out of his pickup truck..

I got the biggest kick out of the truck used to bring down 150 plump Christmas trees yesterday to the Church. It was an old school bus with the back cut off, converting it into a huge flatbed. The people in Vermont really know how to reuse.

Well, I didn't get very far. Or did I? See you next time.

Republicans are in a partying mood

Hedlund honored at fun(d)-raiser

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

About 200 local Republicans joined in the chorus of the "Palm Beach Pokey" in some lighthearted fun during a victory party/fund-raiser for state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund at Hingham's South Shore Country Club on Sunday.

The mood was upbeat as members of Republican town committees and party volunteers from the eight-town district including — Hingham, Scituate, Marshfield, Weymouth and Cohasset — gathered to salute Hedlund who was one of the few Massachusetts Republicans to survive the Nov. 7 election.

Polly Logan of Cohasset, who is vice chairman of the state Republican Party, acted as emcee at the $35-a-head brunch that doubled as a fund-raiser to replenish Hedlund's campaign coffers.

Describing the five-term senator as a "miracle worker," Logan commended Hedlund's reelection effort and also praised several Republicans who "held the banner high" but did not win their seats. Those included Plymouth County Register of Probate Andy Burbine, Mary Anne McKenna (candidate for state rep. Third Plymouth District), John Cafferty (candidate for Plymouth County Commissioner), Ron Wheatley (candidate for state rep. Fourth Plymouth District), Bill Simms (candidate for Plymouth County Commissioner), Anne Hummel (candidate for Plymouth County Register of Deeds) and Plymouth County Sheriff Charles Decas.

Then for a few minutes presidential politics overshadowed its Massachusetts counterpart, as Julie Guild of the Cohasset Republican Town Committee nearly brought the house down with her rendition of the "Palm Beach Pokey." She sang verses like "You bring your lawyers in, You drag the whole thing out. You bring your lawyers in, And you put it all in doubt…"

Then the audience sang, "You do the Palm Beach Pokey, and You turn the count around…And that's what it's all about!"

Hedlund, who faced a tough reelection battle against Democrat challenger Jim Cantwell and won 52 percent of the vote, conceded that the Democrats are more "in tune."

"I think this is testament to the fact that it's true Democrats sing better than Republicans although Republicans govern better," he said to laughter.

But on a more serious note, Hedlund said Republican ranks at the State House have dwindled to 23 in the House and only six in the Senate.

"My race almost seemed like a gang fight with my gang outnumbered," he said. Hedlund also praised his fellow Republicans who were on the ticket with him.

Hedlund said he was proud of the way his volunteers conducted the campaign, which he described as a positive one. He said a year ago his campaign war chest started at "ground zero" but was able to raise about $100,000 – which he said is modest as far as state senate races go. He said while the efforts exceeded fund-raising expectations, the campaign did go into debt a little and the money raised Sunday would wipe that out.

Hedlund, who was recently named the Third Assistant Minority Leader for the Mass. State Senate, said his legislative initiatives for the upcoming session will contain about 50 bills that he is either sponsoring or co-sponsoring that will cover a range of issues including transportation, tax policy and human services.

Digging up dirt on Joe

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Boy, I hope the folks who feel compelled to dig up dirt on our idols leave me alone after I pass on to that Great Garden of Typos in the sky.

Particularly after what Richard Ben Cramer did to Joe DiMaggio, the idol of every red-blooded American boy as a baseball player and especially as the husband briefly of Marilyn Monroe.

Not that I'm anybody's idol, although there once was a whole tribe of small people in the Philippines who referred to me in awe as "He who makes the water rise when he jumps into the pool."

But I digress . . .

I have read every word of Ben Cramer's unauthorized biography, "Joe DiMaggio; The Hero's Life," and I found it to be scurrilous, man, scurrilous and scandalous— which means, of course, I simply could not put it down.

All the time I kept asking myself: Do I really need to know that mobster Frank Costello set up a trust fund for Joltin' Joe at the Bowery Savings Bank in New York and made a contribution to it every time the Great One visited a

Or does it do justice to the man who hit safely in 56 consecutive games to tell me that he beat his wife so badly that Marilyn divorced him after only nine months of marriage when Joe knocked her around for the second time?

Or that he fled the San Francisco earthquake of 1989 with a garbage bag filled with $600,000 in cash (probably small unmarked bills) that he had earned by signing his name for small boys at autograph shows and hadn't bothered to report to Uncle Sam?

I haven't felt so ill-informed since I learned in a 1996 unauthorized biography that Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis lost her virginity to a "boozy writer" in a slow-moving French elevator in Paris.

Or since I found out via one of those Kitty Kelley biographies — "Kitty Litter," they're called in the trade — what Nancy Reagan did during her early days as an eager young starlet in Hollywood.

Or since I was told in "The Arrogance of Power: The Secret World of Richard Nixon," by Anthony Summers, that Dick Nixon, after he lost the 1962 race for governor of California, beat his wife, Pat, "so badly she could not go out the next day."

Summers also made the monumental discovery that Tricky Dicky also took drugs, specifically a prescription drug — which he didn't get from a doctor — called Dilantin to remedy depression, a drug known to cause "mental confusion."

They're still after Jackie Kennedy, incidentally.

According to "America's Queen: The Life of Jacqueline Kennedy Onassis," by Sarah Bradford, Jackie had a serious affair with an architect, John Warnecke, after JFK's death but declined to marry him because he wasn't "big enough money."

I can hardly wait to see what they are going to write about Bill Clinton when he leaves the Oval Office.

What with Monica Lewinsky, Gennifer Flowers, and Paula Jones already in the public domain, they'll probably have to clean it up in order to make it scurrilous.

A futile search for political inspiration

LOCAL VIEW

RICK COLLINS

Human beings like to be inspired. That's why, despite the desire to be individuals, people tend to flock towards leaders, whether good or bad. When there is a lack of leaders who inspire, people will settle. We're even willing to overlook whatever foibles they may have. The meek won't inherit the earth, the charismatic will.

A lot of words have been spoken or written over the past few years saying how this country is going to hell in a hand basket; about how the American political system is more corrupt than a heavyweight boxing match. The result has been a generation of cynical, politically uninterested citizens who view government as an unnecessary evil.

The problem with this country isn't the system, or ballot cards, or candidates who are puppets to PAC's, it's the lack of inspiration. I'm not looking for a leader with a snappy slogan. I don't want a campaign promise pitched at me just because I'm a white, college-educated Gen-Xer. I want someone who will inspire me.

I think that more than anything else is why people have become uninterested in the political process.

Who was inspired by George W. or Al Gore? I sure wasn't. Know who I was inspired by? John McCain. I don't support anything he believes in politically, but when it comes to making America a better place or restoring faith in my core belief of the political process, I would've voted for him in a heartbeat, and I know I'm not alone out there.

I'm not looking for a leader with a snappy slogan. I don't want a campaign promise pitched at me just because I'm a white, college-educated Gen-Xer. I want someone who will inspire me.

Looking back historically, who has been the most beloved politicians of the past 100 years? I'd suggest FDR, JFK, RFK and Ronald Reagan. Their one common characteristic? They inspired us, and we loved them for it. FDR took over a country in a depression and made them feel things were getting better just by standing up at the podium or sitting next to a fireplace, and spouting inspiration. JFK gained the hearts of millions by pushing for civil rights, and ushering in the era of Camelot and the Best and the Brightest. There's a strong argument to think RFK would probably have rode his rising popularity wave into the 1968 convention, unified the youth and left-wing, and gave hope to millions of minorities once again. Pro-USA nationalism was never bigger than it was during the Summer Olympics of 1984, when Reagan was staring down those hated Russkies. But what do people forget about because of the blinders inspiration can put on us? The Depression deepened under Roosevelt, until WWII broke out. JFK refused to pose for a picture with Sammy Davis Jr. and his white wife. RFK was active investigating Commies for the Justice department during McCarthyism. The federal debt skyrocketed under Reagan, who, as it turns out, barely knew what was going on.

But we were inspired. I remember being a third-grader thinking Reagan was the greatest president ever because he made me proud to be an American.

I don't think any Deer Hill student will think the same thing under Gore or Bush.

People criticize the government, not necessarily because it's a rotten, spoiled system, but because they don't have reason not too. It's this political cynicism and disinterest that will eventually be the downfall of democracy, not some Ivy-league educated, morally questionable president. But not only can we not get someone inspirational, we can't get someone inspirational whose flaws we can overlook. Look at Bill Clinton, for example. An article in this month's Esquire magazine quoted a Republican as saying, "I hate the son of a [gun], but his words go right into you." However, Clinton is such a flawed, morally-corrupt person, it is nearly impossible for even a closet-liberal like myself to get rally around him.

Then again, it is so much easier, after all, to be cynical and doubting, rather than inspired and work constructively towards fixing a problem. It's easier to criticize a situation, then roll up the shirtsleeves and get dirty fixing it. It's easy to be Howie Carr. Carr has made a career out of being cynical, whiny, and the leader of the fellowship of the miserable. The result is a highly-read newspaper column. But let's face it. He will never have a statue erected in his honor. His columns will never be bound in to a book and given to soldiers going off to war for inspiration. Cynics are forgotten. People who inspire are remembered.

W don't need Gandhi to resurface, or Abraham Lincoln to rise from the dead. We just need someone who makes us want to do good, be better, or just plain believe in the American system, rather than complain and enjoy being miserable.

So I have a message for any future candidate or political know-it-all, which I hope others will get behind. Don't w(h)ine and dine me, looking for my vote, or my faith in you, just inspire me.

Unicorn Singers concert to benefit Christmas in the City

On Sunday Dec. 10 at 4 p.m. First Parish in Cohasset is sponsoring a Christmas Concert featuring the Unicorn Singers, directed by Margo Euler. The concert is for the benefit of Christmas in the City.

This year's concert is sure to invoke feelings of Christmas' past as the Unicorn Singers will present Hugo Distler's "The Christmas Story", an a cappella work arranged to highlight solo voices in the telling of the familiar Christmas story. The choral sections are built around the well-known chorale melody "Lo how a rose e'er blooming." A group of contemporary arrangements of well-known carols will complete the program, as well as the usual complement of carols for the audience to sing with the performers.

This concert has been a tradition at First Parish for more than 25 years. Each year a local charitable organization is chosen to receive the proceeds of the concert. This year Christmas in the City has been chosen as the beneficiary. Christmas in the City, founded by Situate residents Jake and Sparky Kennedy, hosts a Christmas party for homeless children/families. The party has grown from 167 children in 1989 to over 1800 last year. This grass roots, totally volunteer organization, founded on the belief that no child should experience Christmas from a homeless shelter, is expanding its offerings to include services to help find homes for the homeless.

This concert has been a tradition at First Parish for more than 25 years. Each year a local charitable organization is chosen to receive the proceeds of the concert.

Tickets for the concert can be purchased for $10 at the door of the church on Cohasset Common for the concert on Sunday, Dec. 10 at 4 p.m. You may become a concert patron for a donation of $40 which includes two tickets to the concert. All money raised over the cost of the concert will be given to Christmas in the City for the support of homeless children and their families.

Deer Hill kids knit for the needy

By Rick Collins

Inside the front hall of the Deer Hill School on Sohier Street is a colorful board covered with hats. These are special hats. Not special in that they have 1-4-3 stitched on them or that they are the latest styles from Abercrombie & Fitch or American Eagle.

They are special because the school's fourth, fifth and sixth graders made them for the express purpose of keeping somebody — a homeless mother or one of her children — warm on a cold, wintry night.

For the fourth year, led by art teacher Ann Berman, Deer Hill students, boy and girls alike, are knitting for a cause.

Last year, the school made nearly 200 hats for the Brockton Coalition for the Homeless. This year, 110 hats have already been knitted for this year's special charity — Rosie's Place in Boston, a shelter for homeless women and children. The hats will be delivered to the shelter on Dec. 20.

"I thought it would be nice to teach a skill that could help others," said Berman about the program. "For some, it's the first time they've done something or made something for someone else. It's been a great project."

Starting in September, Berman's students can learn how to knit and then spend whatever free time they want working on the hat. "For some it takes three days, for others three months," said Berman, who said Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan has been working on his for a couple of years now.

> "I thought it would be nice to teach a skill that could help others."
> — Ann Berman, art teacher

"It's about 90 percent done," Callahan joked. "I've got to get it done this year."

But students find all sorts of spare time to knit. "They knit in the car, at home, at their desks in school when they're not supposed to be," she said. A couple of sixth-grade basketball players even brought out the needles and yarn while sitting on the bench during a game, without so much as a word of complaint from the coach. "What do you tell a kid who's knitting something for the homeless?" she asked.

Berman began the program four years ago, and with the assistance of an All Star Grant from Fleet Bank, purchased the yarn and needles. Now the project replenishes itself. Students can purchase needles for $4 and colored yarn, also for $4.

"They fill out a card with their name and age and how long it took them to knit it," Berman said. "They write a personal note to whomever gets the hat, whether it's 'Seasons Greetings,' or 'Good Luck' or 'Hope this keeps you warm.'...The director at Rosie's Place said the last time we gave them hats [the first year Deer Hill did the project], the cards meant as much to them as the hats themselves. Some would hang onto the cards.

"They loved that a little nine-year old spent so much time making something for them."

Callahan said the program has "taken off" and likes the character education value it provides. "It's important for children to do something like that not only for the holiday season, but throughout the year; to do things for other less fortunate people," he said.

Berman said as many boys as girls take up knitting and they are not afraid of any stereotypes society can sometimes label knitters. "I explain that it was invented by sailors and fishermen to repair holes in their nets while out at sea, and it was women who took it over," she said. "A lot of kids say 'My dad knows how to knit' [because of the number of fishermen or boat owners in town]. It took it out of a girl's and boy's thing."

The only thing Berman does, besides order the supplies and give initial instruction, is "cast on" to the needles, or start the hats. And even then, she gets out of that sometimes. "My mother sat on the beach and did 97 of them," she said.

What began as a project for the three-day-a-week, after-school art program she runs has turned into something everyone at the school can be involved with. "Parents love the project," she said. "And the kids love it just to get the pat on the back."

Coach Ford looks to overcome lack of size with shooting, speed and smarts

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset's boys varsity basketball squad opens its season next Thursday with a home game against Harwich. And the way the practices have been running, 10th year coach Ron Ford is very optimistic about this up coming year.

The veterans, necessary for a successful team in any sport, are senior tri-capains Erik Shea, TJ Bilodeau (both varsity starters since their sophomore year) and Doug O'Brien.

"I think between Doug, Erik and TJ, we should have tremendous senior leadership," said Ford., who also took over as Cohasset's Athletic Director this year for the late Clark Chatterton.

Shea made the Mariner All-Scholastic Soccer team and played for the South Shore League soccer All-Star team this past fall. O'Brien also competed on the South Shore League All-Star team for soccer and baseball, as they have both shown their all-around athletcism in other sports. Bilodeau, last year's Cohasset MVP in the Holiday Classic Tournament, will combine with the other captains to lead the Skippers this year.

"They are the total package," praised Ford. "They have all worked very hard on their games.

Though O'Brien has missed some practice time with a leg injury, Ford believes he will be a tremendous contributor to the team this season.

"Doug gives us tremendous versatility," Ford continued, referring to the one who was arguably the league's best Sixth Man last year. "He is the only kid I've coached that can play all five positions."

The junior class for this team is very strong, including Nick Bolster and Liam Martin, who both just finished terrific seasons on the football field.

"RJ did a great job last year as a JV coach," said Ford of RJ Miggliacio, last year's junior varsity coach, and now a varsity assistant.

Another junior, Matt Bilodeau, the middle of three Bilodeau brothers, gained some experience at the point guard position last year when Daniel Trowers moved to Randolph. The youngest in the family is freshman Chris Bilodeau, who will get his first experience at the varsity level.

"It has been interesting," laughed Ford about having three siblings on the same squad. "Practices have been pretty heated.

"TJ is somebody who has every trick in the book," Ford continued. "He is a smart basketball player. With Matt, as soon as you let your guard down, he'll blow by you. And Chris is a strong, athletic, hard-nosed basketball player."

Despite Cohasset's leadership, there is one major area in which the Skippers are lacking: height. Losing four players, all of whom were at least six-foot-two, to graduation last year, Cohasset has made some pickups.

"Shawn as a freshman is going to get a shot at it," said Ford of first year player Shawn Connelly, the Skippers only true center. "He's a hard working kid, and hopefully he will help us establish and inside presence."

Second year power forward Ben Lynner will be banging bodies in the paint this year as well. For what

Cohasset's O'Neil receives high honorable mention

When undertaking a project such as this, it's a given that difficult choices will have to be made. On that front, this job was everything we expected and more.

In the process of naming this team, we requested and received input from several area coaches. We tried to consider the best players regardless of what school they played for.

There were several difficult decisions, and many of those named as High Honorable Mentions nearly made this team. Cohasset junior captain Maggie O'Neil was one of those. The midfielder scored half of the Lady Skippers goals this season (8) and "just controlled the middle of the field for us," lauded Cohasset head coach Deb Beal.

"Maggie was a strong and consistent player for us all year, both on and off the field," said Beal. "She really took to the leadership role as a junior, and she'll obviously be looked to for that again next season."

"Caroline really stood out for us this year," offered Sailors head coach Joe Strazdes. "She played strong and consistent even when things weren't going well, and set a great example for the younger girls."

Without further ado, here's the team we chose:

Lindsey Waldron (Sr. Capt.) - Hanover - Fullback

Waldron

Scored four goals and had one assist despite being the Lady Indians' top defender ... A captain this year, Waldron scored what proved to be the game-winning goal in Hanover's 1-0 win over Gateway Regional in the Div. 3 State Championship... Waldron was selected to SSL, Eastern Mass., and All-State All-Star teams and was also voted by SSL coaches as one of the top five players in the league...A dominating force in the backfield, Waldron marked on some of the areas best forwards and was virtually unbeatable...Only 12 goals were scored against Hanover (the SSL champ) in 25 games, thanks in large part to Waldron, who also plays on the South Coast Elite club team with other Mariner All-Stars...She is looking to continue her soccer career at Richmond or Wake Forrest. Hanover coach Garth Nelson: "She's easily the best defender in Eastern Mass., if not the state. She has a great physical presence on the field and a great range of play. She has excellent speed, has a great head. Although she's a stalwart on defense she's also an excellent offensive player."

Shawna LaPointe (Sr. Capt.) - Abington - Forward

LaPointe

Led the South Shore League in scoring with 11 goals and 21 assists for the Green Wave, who were the runners up in the league...A captain this year, LaPointe is a four-year starter at forward for Abington and was selected to SSL, Eastern Mass., and All-State All-Star teams, and led the Green Wave to the Div. 3 South Sectional Semifinals where they

Several key players to return for Skippers next fall

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

When the temperature drops to the point where football fans are huddling in a corner of the bleachers with one blanket keeping six people relatively warm, you know the season is coming to a close.

And after the annual Thanksgiving game two weeks ago, all the Skipper faithfuls were able to reflect on the solid year had by their home team.

"We played as well as any team in Division four..." said third year coach Tony Rolfe, proud of the season his squad put together.

Cohasset opened the season with a 24-13 victory over Arch Bishop Williams, a mere three days into the school year.

"That was a great game considering how much time we had to prepare," praised Rolfe.

Cohasset proceeded to rattle off two more non-league wins, a 13-3 victory over Cape Cod Tech and a 12-8 nail-biter in Nantucket's hostile home field.

"If you can beat Nantucket in Nantucket," started Rolfe, "you've played a pretty good game."

Cohasset then lost two straight to divisional powerhouses Norton and Carver. Though both teams had been crushing nearly every team who played them, the Skippers lost a nip and tuck battle to the Lancers of Norton while the Crusaders of Carver held only a one point lead at halftime.

"Norton and Carver were a notch above everybody else," said Rolfe.

Those two teams, along with rivals Hull, Abington and Norwell, and of Girls jump at challenge of varsity schedule

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After posting a 10-8 record last year with only eight players (four of whom were only freshman) playing a JV schedule, the girls basketball program is ready to take on a difficult varsity schedule.

Coach Ellen Carr gets a bead on the action as Ashley Faber brings the ball over halfcourt.

The program has more than doubled in size since last year, as 18 players came out for tryouts this year. Before, second year coach Ellen Carr was wondering if she would have enough to maintain one team. But she is now delighted to have the advantage of more substitutes split between two teams.

"We need to be a little more confident in our man to man," said Carr of her defensive strategy. "Last year we simply needed more subs."

Carr's defensive practices are extremely difficult for her players, her mantra: "offense sells tickets, defense wins games."

Carr's offense will be focused around a core of very fast younger players who are adept at taking advantage of fast break opportunities.

The Lady Skippers will also have a secondary offense in the half court set, where they will be able to take advantage of their three point shooters.

"We definitely will be utilizing our strengths," explained Carr. "The freshmen have looked very good shooting the ball."

Cohasset's veteran shooters will course Cohasset, made up as Rolfe called it, "the toughest league in division four."

The South Shore League teams combined for a 23-5 record in non-league games, and two of the losses were to Fairhaven and Bishop Fenwick, both competitors in the Division IV Super Bowl.

The Skippers will have a much better chance to stay competitive in the league next year, when some of the big name seniors graduate. Jim Nivens, Chris Villanueva, JT Eakins (Carver), David Glassman, Kenyatta Hale (Norton), Jim Foley, Ken Sault, Rob Scully (Hull), and Mike Mohan (Norwell), all who scored off the Skippers this year, will be moving on from South Shore League football.

The Skippers had their own core of outstanding seniors, including (co-captain) Brian Krupczak, (co-captain) Craig Davis, Jeff Scribner, Justin Langham, Chris Golden and Ronan Buick.

"There were only six, which is good," reported Rolfe, knowing he will not have to go through filling 15 spots like Norton will in 2001. "But they will be very difficult to replace."

Krupczak, a running back, had a fantastic season filling the rushing position extremely well after last year's 1,500 yard ball carrier Daniel Trowers moved to Randolph.

Davis and Scribner played on Cohasset's offensive line with great intensity, providing plenty of running room for Krupczak, and pass protection for second year junior quarterback Jason Brown.

Golden, a kicker and tight end, was able to block, tackle, and enjoy a solid year on special teams.

Langham and Buick both had terrific seasons at the linebacker position, Buick leading the team in tackles for the year.

Cohasset senior captains Craig Davis (#55) and Brian Krupczak(#30) will certainly be missed....

In Rolfe's eyes, Cohasset played its best game of the season in Week 8, in a 16-7 win over Norwell, the Skippers' only SSL triumph of the year.

...but talented players like Liam Martin, seen here hauling in a pass on Thanksgiving, is one of several talented player who is helping to provide Cohasset football fans with a bright outlook for 2001.

"The first half was the best I've coached in Cohasset," appraised Rolfe, as the Skippers won that half 14-0.

Junior Mr. Everything (wingback/halfback/return man/deep back) Nick Bolster, one of Cohasset's assets next year, had picked off two passes, and kicked two punts downed inside the Clippers' 10-yard line.

Two more rising stars also had great games that day: linebackers Cosimo Cambi, who sacked Norwell quarterback John McKenzie in the end zone for a late safety, and Ben Lynner, who recorded a sack and two forced fumbles.

"Those two are the sleepers in the league," said Rolfe, as they were among the team leaders in tackles nearly every game.

Though Cohasset lost its last game of the season, 43-6, to Thanksgiving rival Hull, Rolfe remains optimistic about the future. And with the talent he has been grooming in his three years here, why shouldn't he?

he lacks in height, he makes up for with strength and toughness.

"He's our one thug out there," joked Ford.

"He's the muscle," added Miggliacio.

This year, the Skippers will be running what is called a "motion rules" offense, where the ball handlers have many options as opposed to one designated pass every trip up the floor.

"There is not one set play," explained Ford. "It requires a tremendous amount from the players, but this is probably the smartest team I've ever coached."

The "motion rules" offense has been in place for four years now in Cohasset, meaning this year's seniors are the first class to have full high school experience with it. The options also allow the Skippers to draw on their strength, the three point shot.

"We have multiple three point threats," said Ford. "I just don't see how a team can play a zone on us. But this is also a very good dribble penetration team. The team is capable of scoring 70 points a game."

However, Ford's main focus, or the Ford Focus if you will, has always been defense. The coach likes to run an up tempo, in your face defense, pressuring man-to-man. He works his team extremely hard in practices, often having his players running defensive drills with bricks in their hands.

"We are only as good as we play on defense," stated Ford, who will be looking to first year Cohasset assistant coach Tim Owens, a former coach at Rockland High School.

Ford's other assistants, Miggliacio and Mark Hall, will be coordinating individual work and the offense, respectively, while Owens will be running the defense.

"I am very excited about the addition of our new coach," effused Ford.

"We are going to be running this team like a football team, where we'll have an offensive coordinator and a defensive coordinator. I've never given my assistants this much responsibility. It is a great luxury for me."

All in all, this looks like it should be a quality year, with the Skippers hoping to some day return to the time when every year fans were thinking about a possible state championship.

"We have a lot of nice, different pieces," started Ford. "We just need to put it together."

be leading the way. Second year shooting guard, sophomore Heather Peraino, who just finished a great field hockey season, led the Lady Skippers in scoring last year. Second year small forward, sophomore Lindsay Grossman, has an excellent shot from both short and long range.

Katie Wenmark, the only senior on the squad, played some center and power forward last year. But coach Carr hopes to get her out on the perimeter more this season and cash in on her sweet touch from 10-12 feet.

"Katie has been doing a very nice job leading the way," reported Carr. "Katie will be moving to the wing this year. She is more comfortable in that position."

Second year sophomore center Maura O'Brien led the Lady Skippers in rebounds last year, and will be looked upon for similar production this season.

"Maura is a wonderful leaper," appraised Carr, a former player for Tulane. "If we can just learn to box out, we should be able to scoop up quite a few rebounds."

Freshman Danielle Pinkus has also shown some toughness under the basket during tryouts, as have other tall rookies, Ashley Faber and Libby Meikleham.

Carr hopes to give these and other freshmen the opportunity to play at the highest level of competition to gain some experience.

"I would like to be able to let everyone have a chance at varsity," stated Carr. "I want to bring the freshmen up in a rotation."

The freshmen class has some good speed with Courtney Caron and Gillian Weber, who just finished her first season on the varsity soccer team, pacing he pack.

The freshman will play on their own team coached by Deb Beal, also Cohasset's girl's soccer coach, while the eight upperclassmen will play varsity.

The juniors of the squad, first year player Jessica Stevermer, and second year players Liza Parker and Kerry Long, have impressed Carr already this year.

"Jessica has come along very well," appraised the head coach. "She is a quick learner. Liza and Kerry have improved very much."

Cohasset opens the season December 13th at home against Mashpee, the start of what hopefully is going to be a very good season.

Middle School Winter Sports

The Cohasset Middle School winter sports season starts with an informational/sign-up meeting on Thursday, Dec. 14 at 8 a.m. in the school cafeteria.

Students are asked to bring a $75 user's fee and a note from a physician verifying the student has had a physical exam within the past 365 days. This is required only if the school nurse does not have an up-to-date physical on file. First practices begin the week of Dec. 18.

The following team sports are offered in the winter: boys basketball, girls basketball, wrestling.

The following individual sports are offered as non-competitive instructional activities: gymnastics, co-ed swimming, skiing (this is a self funded activity).

endured a tough 3-2 loss to Medfield…LaPointe was returning this year from knee injury suffered in last year's tournament which required surgery…The senior is hoping to attend Cornell University. Abington coach Jeff Kent: "She's a very impressive player. She has great skills and a great work rate. Margaret Shute (Sr. Capt.) - Norwell- Midfielder She's an extremely intense and aggressive player who is really a great attacker. She's fast and she's extremely strong with both feet."

Shute

Jana Whiting (Sr.) Silver Lake- Midfielder

Jana was the Lady Lakers' leading scorer this season, with 12 goals and 15 assists, and finished her career as S-L's third highest scoring female soccer player all-time…She was voted the #1 player in the Old Colony League by the league's coaches… She was selected for the OCL, Eastern Mass and All State All-Star teams… A member of the elite South Coast Club team, along with fellow Mariner All-Stars Margaret Shute, Mary Blais and Lindsey Waldron…Jana plans to play soccer in college, and has spoken to several prominent universities…She plans to major in either pre-law or Political Science, with an eye towards studying law. Silver Lake coach Bubba Ashby: "Jana combines speed, great skills and a great physical presence on the field. She has no real weakness as a player, and there were games she just dominated."

Whiting

Liz Lima (Sr. Capt.) - Rockland - Forward

Lima

Was named an All-American forward this year for the Patriot League runners up…A year ago, Lima was the state's leading scorer…She finished her impressive soccer career at Rockland High with 99 goals and 60 assists…This year, Lima was selected to the PL, Eastern Mass. and All-State All-Star teams…She is an incredible force in front of the net and is lethal from all areas of the field…Her speed and physicality gave her the ability to continually beat some of the areas best defenders…The senior is ranked number two in her class and has already signed a letter of intent to attend Harvard University where she plans to continue her soccer career. Lima was also offered an athletic scholarship from Boston College, but turned it down. Rockland coach Laurindo Lima: "When we need her, she scores goals. We've been down before, but she gets us back every time."

Jill Palmieri (Sr. Capt.) - Hanover - Midfielder

Palmieri

Scored 9 goals and added three assists as an intricate part of Hanover's Div. 3 State Championship team…A captain this year, Palmieri was a force to be reckoned with in the midfield, as she was almost impossible to beat… Palmieri was selected to SSL, Eastern Mass. and All-State All-Star teams…The senior is looking to attend Mary Washington College in Fredricksburg, Va. Hanover coach Garth Nelson: "She's a genuine workhorse in the midfield. She's a strong player, wins, holds and distributes the ball well. She'll also willingly step up to help on offense or step back to help on defense. She was an excellent captain both on and off the field. She had an incredibly even temperament and responds to pressure well."

Ali Aucoin (Sr. Capt.) - Hingham - Forward

Aucoin

Scored 11 goals and added six assists for the Patriot League champion Harborwomen… The captain, paired with teammate Carrie Williams, was a quiet force in front of the net, often beating competitors with simplicity, rather than flashy moves…The senior's performance this year helped Hingham capture its first PL title since 1984…Aucoin has been the Harborwomen's most consistent player over the years, with 44 career goals…Aucoin was named a PL All-Star. Hingham coach Guy Enoch: "She's been very consistent at forward for us every year. She's not a selfish player, which is something she should be recognized for. She's a good, quiet kid. She has great foot skills and her orientation in the penalty area is where she shined. She always knew where to be."

Ronnie Rich (Sr. Capt.) - Hanover - Sweeper

Rich

Was a fixture in the backfield for the Lady Indians… Known by her coach as "The Communicator," Rich and teammate Lindsey Waldron (see above) were a virtual wall in the Hanover backfield, causing headaches for some of the areas top forwards…The captain's defensive efforts and constant communication to her teammates played a significant role in Hanover's undefeated season, which was capped with a Div. 3 State Title…Rich is considering a number of colleges at which she would like to further her soccer career. She is leaning toward Clark University but has also expressed interest in Stonehill, Dartmouth, Merrimack, Framingham State, and St. Anselm. Hanover coach Garth Nelson: "She's the best communicator on the field. The information she provided was good and never failed. She's very mobile on defense, has tremendous skills and was almost never beaten. She makes things happen and never stops talking. She's the heart of the team."

Mary Blais (Sr. Capt.) - Marshfield - Forward

Blais

Scored 19 goals and added 8 assists for the Eastern Mass Champion Lady Rams, leading the way for the team's Cinderella season which was capped at the Div. 1 State Championship where they suffered a tough 2-0 loss to Ludlow… A captain of the team, the speedy and powerful forward easily found her way around some of the areas best defenders…The senior was selected to the Atlantic Coast League and Eastern Mass. All-Star teams and was named the Div. 1 Player of the Year by the MIAA…Blais has her sights on attending either Merrimack College, St. Michael's College, or Northeastern University and hopes to continue playing soccer. Marshfield coach Fred Podbelski: "She's a big leader. She'd give me 100 percent every time she took the field. A lot of teams liked to double team her and she just took anything they gave her. She has, of course, very good skills and excellent control with both feet. Although she was a forward, she'd play at any position. She'd do anything to win."

Susan Sullivan (Sr. Capt.) - Marshfield - Midfielder

Sullivan

Standing only five feet tall, Sullivan still caused headaches for opponents in the midfield with her quick feet… Sullivan had a big tournament this year for the E. Mass. Champions, scoring the game-winning goals in Marshfield's 1-0 win over Bridgewater-Raynham in the quarterfinals and in the team's 1-0 win over previously unbeaten Newton-North in the Div. 1 State Semifinals…A captain on the Marshfield team, Sullivan was selected to the ACL and Eastern Mass. All-Star teams…She is considering attending the University of Vermont, Union or St. Michael's College. Marshfield coach Fred Podbelski: "She might be small, but she's such a tough player. If she got knocked down, she'd get right back up. Few people could keep up with her and she wore her opponents down. She is an excellent player both on offense and defense. She's the spark plug. She makes things happen."

Brittany Cheney (Jr.) - Abington - Keeper

Cheney

Allowed just 17 goals and recorded 10 shutouts and five one-goal games in 20 contests… Only a second-year soccer player, Cheney came up big during the regular season, combining for 24 saves in scoreless tie and one-goal loss in two meetings with Div. 3 State Champions Hanover, winners of the SSL… Also, had 11 saves in a 3-2 win over Patriot League champ Hingham…The junior played a spectacular game in Abington's tough 3-2 loss to Medfield in the Div. 3 South Sectional Semifinal with 10 saves…Cheney was selected to the SSL, Eastern Mass., and All-State All-star teams. Abington coach Jeff Kent: "She's a highly skillful and graceful keeper. She covers the net remarkably well. She's quick, she positions herself well, distributes the ball extremely well and has the best hands of any player I've ever seen. She just grabs everything."

Selectmen give Rep-elect Garrett Bradley a full plate

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

State representative-elect Garrett Bradley got his wish Tuesday.

He asked selectmen what their legislative priorities are — and he got an earful.

"I just wanted to come down, I've already gone to Hingham and Hull," Bradley said. But almost before he could finish that thought, Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan interjected with a laugh, "This district gets help in alphabetical order, remember that."

Bradley quickly explained that he didn't intentionally make Cohasset his third stop, but had trouble getting on an earlier selectmen's agenda.

Moving to more serious matters, Town Manager Mark Haddad urged support of a bill that would give selectmen some latitude to transfer money between accounts at the end of a fiscal year where needed.

"This district gets help in alphabetical order, remember that."

— Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan

"If there's a shortfall in the police budget and an excess in the fire budget, money could be transferred without going into a deficit or requiring Town Meeting action," he said.

Bradley asked if the bill had a "local option" provision meaning that towns could decide whether to adopt the legislation.

Haddad explained Town Meeting would have to adopt the legislation and if it did, any transfer would still require the approval of the advisory committee.

Selectman Michael Sullivan likened involving the advisory committee as a "built-in audit system."

Callahan told Bradley board members would like him to keep them informed through frequent visits, especially on issues involving education reform and changes in state aid for education.

Haddad said he was concerned about the impact of ballot Question 4 that will roll back the state income tax rate to from 5.95 percent to 5 percent over three years. Bradley said he had discussed the issue with House Ways and Means Chairman Paul Haley, D-Weymouth, who is not sure what effect the rollback might have.

Due to the passage of Question 4, Haddad said as a precaution during FY02 budget talks, he is level funding state aid in all revenue projections.

Garrett Bradley

Selectman Michael Sullivan asked Bradley to keep the board updated on state funding for special education.

Bradley said he would be following legislation that would require towns only pay three times the average cost per regular-day student for special education students with the state picking up the balance. In other words if the legislation passed, Cohasset would be required to pay a maximum of $18,000 annually for each special education student (three times $6,000).

Haddad said that would amount to "enormous savings for Cohasset."

The proposed 16 percent water rate hike for North Cohasset, which is served by Mass-American Water Company, was also a topic. Bradley said he's asked to be put on the government regulation committee that addresses such issues.

Selectmen also asked Bradley to support Hull's efforts for a grant to rebuild the deteriorating culvert at West Corner and wanted support to get $250,000 to rebuild the Beechwood Street culvert.

Bradley said he has signed on as a co-sponsor of a bill that would reinstate the state moratorium on landfills. The town is concerned once the moratorium is lifted, Cohasset Heights Landfill will file with the state to open a new landfill in Area 5 off Rte. 3A.

Bradley said he has been spending a lot of time at the State House with retiring state Rep. Mary Jeanette Murray. Even though Bradley has not been sworn in, bills must be filed under his name and not Murray's because they won't go into effect until after she leaves office in January.

The cooperation prompted Haddad to quip, "at least some transition processes are going forward."

Cohasset citizen of the year nominations open

Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January 2001.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer or other municipal worker. And the nominee may be a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has freely given of his or her time and energy for a worthwhile Cohasset project or cause.

This year's recipient will be the eighth person honored as the Cohasset Citizen of the Year, joining past recipients:

1993: the late Gerard T. Keating, "Mr. Cohasset," for his more than half-century of contributions to the community, including serving as chairman of the Council on Aging, chairman of the school committee, president of the hockey boosters club, vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society, director of veterans services, and lector, eucharistic minister and usher at St. Anthony's Church.

1994: Joseph D. Buckley, for his work behind the scenes helping seniors understand the complexities of the healthcare system and to access health benefits through SHINE (Serving Health Information Needs of Elders), his service on the Council on Aging, and volunteer work over the years with the Boy Scouts, Little league, Sunday School and more.

1995: Dr. Robert T. Sceery, for his more than 40 years of dedicated service as a pediatrician in town and school doctor. He also served on the board of health and led the fight back in the 1970s to sewer the town. He is also a familiar figure at town meetings where he speaks his mind on important issues.

1996: The Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor of the Second Congregational Church, for being a positive force for good through his work with the Appalachia Service Project (ASP), an ecumenical volunteer effort involving Cohasset teenagers. ASP is a home building ministry in central Appalachia.

1997: Anna Abbruzzese, for all her volunteer work including preparing and delivering meals for the Pine Street Inn, driving the senior shuttle and coordinating the Gourmet Cooking Club at the Council on Elder Affairs; and her many efforts to help revitalize Cohasset Village through the Farmers' Market and much more.

1998: Katherine Stanton, for her tireless service to the town and its citizens over the years. She also volunteers as a case reviewer for the state Dept. of Social Services, served on the school committee and recreation committee, and along with her family was involved with the creation of the Cohasset Sailing Club.

1999: the late Clark Chatterton, for his generosity of spirit and deep caring for his fellow man, his years of work as a teacher and athletic director at the high school, including innumerable efforts helping others behind the scenes. He also helped raise money for many causes including Alumni Field and the American Cancer Society.

Road rage is on the rise

where aggressive driving resulted in the driver of one car throwing a cup of coffee on the other.

Other instances include threats, reckless driving, thrown cigarettes, and one arrest.

The arrest stemmed from a instance where two cars were jockeying for position going northbound on Route 3A. One car swerved at the other causing it to be run off the southbound side of the road.

Route 3A appears to be a hotbed of angry drivers. Of the 16 reported instances, nine have occurred on the heavy-traveled state highway. According to Jackson, upwards of 17,000 cars a day travel up and down Route 3A, many during the morning and afternoon rush hours. As a result, Jackson said Cohasset police, along with State Police, have tried to make themselves very visible during the heavy-traffic hours.

Both Tarantino and Jackson think the increase in road rage reports partly stems from the jump in cell phone use. "Everyone's got a mobile phone, so they're able to report it more," Jackson said. Before the advent of cell phones, Jackson said people would have to drive home to report it, and by then, probably have gone through a cooling-off period.

Interestingly, if a person is arrested, they aren't charged with road rage. A representative from Quincy District Court said road rage is a descriptive term used for the incident. But a person can be charged with for example, reckless driving, assault with a dangerous weapon, or a combination of charges.

Dr. Charles Morin, head of the psychiatry department at South Shore Hospital, sees a number of possible causes that contribute to road rage. "I know of a lot of patients with depression and anxiety that recognize an increase in irritability," said Morin. He said according to the March issue of Forensic Science, four out of five cases where road rage has led to homicide, the person committing the crime has been drunk. He also said people under increased stress or suffering from an impulse control disorder, such as intermittent explosive disorder, can be more likely to get into road rage.

Though no one personality type that is identified with road rage, Morin said the American Automobile Association says most are relatively young people, poorly educated, with a prior history of violence, though some are professionals with no prior history. Most also have recently "suffered a professional or emotional setback." Only 4 percent of the aggressors are female.

Morin, a Cohasset resident, also said the feeling of loss of control can play a part. "My experience is when they changed the traffic light pattern on Pond Street and created a long traffic line where none existed before, it can be very irritating," he said. "If I'm affected by it, I can imagine a lot of other drivers that have to drive longer distances have the same sense of frustration, which can help them develop into rage."

He said a feeling of a loss of control while diving can result in the need to get that control back. "If you get cut off, the way to get the control back is to ram the other driver or force them off the road.

Quite often, Morin said, the event precipitating the incident are trivial. "Some of the stated reasons given are fighting over a parking space, cutting a motorist off, refusal to allow passing, excessive use of the horn, obscene gestures, tailgating, not using the turn signal," he listed. "Pretty trivial stuff. Often a violent traffic dispute is not the result of a single incident, but a series of stressors in a motorist's life." Morin said a traffic incident is often just the last straw.

"But sometimes it takes two to tango," he continued. "Often the reports I read in the newspaper suggest it's not isolated. Someone gets cutoff, then starts tailgating, and then speeds up and the other person tries to tail gate. The situation escalates."

Jackson said if a person thinks he or she is being a victim or road rage, that person should either turn off the road, and drive to a public building or police station. He said a person should avoid pulling over in order to prevent the appearance of a confrontational attitude.

Koed helps make history count

5:45 flight down to Florida that evening. He came back up one day for Thanksgiving and afterwards flew right back. Koed said his day would start by picking up Newman at 6:30 a.m., driving to the recount site, working straight through until midnight, briefing the Gore team, and getting to bed by 1:30 a.m. "We picked up whatever we could," Koed said about media coverage of the recount. "But once we were inside we were straight out. There was barely enough time to have lunch or dinner. It was a very, very long, grueling schedule."

The main issue of the recount came down to what constituted a vote — an issue that has been debated many times in Massachusetts before the punch-card balloting system was decertified by Secretary of State William Galvin in 1997. Newman said dents shouldn't count as a vote when he originally worked on Johnston's campaign for U.S. Congress. "Now he's seen the light," Koed said with no pun attended. "The court overruled that law in Massachusetts [that dents aren't votes] and that is the position Democrats took in Florida."

He also didn't think that all the recounts and handling of the ballots were resulting in damage to the ballots, causing chads to fall out. "Any additional handling may knock out loose chads, but that was the voters' intention," he said. "If that was true [extra handling of the ballots causing chads to fall out], there wouldn't be chads in places where there weren't any races."

In the general scheme of things, to have hundreds of lawyers, spending thousands of hours and millions of dollars arguing over "dimpled chads" might be seem kind of funny. "It would be humorous," Koed agreed, "if it wasn't for the presidency."

He was critical of the Republicans' strategies during the recount. "They were transfixed with the validity of the machine," said Koed, "even though their own experts came in saying in a close race you need a hand count...A machine can't always surmise what is going on in the ballot."

He also said his Republican counterparts would randomly challenge every fifth Gore ballot in an attempt to create such a large number of challenges, officials wouldn't be able to go through them in time. "The number of challenges was one of the reasons we couldn't finish by the deadline," Koed said.

The Pleasant Street resident came home finally last Saturday, and spent the weekend recuperating from the ordeal so he could hear Gore miss out on two court decisions Monday. "I'm a little disappointed that they [the courts] never looked at any of the ballots," he said. "The number of ballots in question could make the race go either way. The best evidence is the ballots themselves. Somebody needs to look at them in a position to make a judgment."

Though Gore's chances of winning the election are slim, Koed said he will always have the knowledge that he was part of history. "At the time I was running to be an elector, I thought it would be a great honor to represent Massachusetts," said Koed who has been interviewed by the TV show "Chronicle" as a member of the Electoral College and "Greater Boston" host Emily Rooney, for his role in Florida. "All this just made it much more exciting. To be right in the middle of the Electoral College and the recounts has been fascinating. I've taken calls from London looking for information about how we felt and this or that. It's just been fascinating."

Mother of two wants to stop 'living out of boxes'

new apartment on Cape Cod. Her boyfriend did not live with her when she moved , but an incident occurred months later which made Stacey's life take a turn for the worse.

"When I was living in that place on the Cape, there was an occasion where (the boyfriend) came over one night, and kicked in the neighbor's door downstairs," she said. "Needless to say, I was asked to leave."

Stacey became afraid of the man, and started to try to stay away from him. After she was evicted from the second apartment, she moved into a new apartment on the South Shore with some friends in December 1999. She lived there for a while, but again, situations arose.

"It just got way too overcrowded," Stacey said. "It was just a three-bedroom apartment but there were so many people living there."

Stacey had nowhere else to turn. She found herself homeless that April with her small daughter. Her son was living with her parents, so that made the weight on her shoulders a bit easier, but not much. Stacey went to the Department of Transitional Assistance and asked what she could do. In short, the department put her and her daughter up in a motel in Brockton for four days.

"This can happen to anyone. I never saw myself living in a shelter — not because I thought I was too good for that, but because I thought it just could never happen."

Stacey, who's currently living at Carolina Hill in Marshfield

"The people at the department told me there were no open beds in any shelters around the state at the time, so I had to go to a motel. That was just horrendous. I took all my boxes full of stuff and went there like they said. That's all I feel like I've been doing for so long — just living out of boxes."

On the fourth day she and her daughter were staying at the hotel, Stacey was told that a bed had opened up in a shelter in central Massachusetts, so again, she took her boxes full of her things, her daughter, and she moved out to a part of the state she was totally unfamiliar with.

But she grew accustomed to the shelter. She even found a steady job, and began saving some money. But seven months after she moved into the central Massachusetts shelter, her past caught up with her.

"My former boyfriend actually found out where I was," Stacey said. "I had given the people at the shelter specific instructions to tell him I wasn't here. But he found out where I was, and the people who ran the shelter felt I was a danger to the other people living there. I was told that I was being moved again. I was all settled there, and just when I got used to it, I had to leave. I also had to quit the job I had at the time."

At the beginning of November, Stacey and her daughter were transferred from their central Massachusetts location to Carolina Hill, where they still reside.

"It's just all so hectic right now," she said. "To me, moving here was just a last-minute thing. I'm not even working right now. It seems like my daughter adjusts to anywhere that we go. I don't think this whole thing has hit her like it's hit me."

But Stacey said she doesn't have any other options —she doesn't get along with her father, she doesn't have enough money to afford the state's rent prices, and she is stuck on numerous waiting lists for public housing. She is awaiting a section eight voucher from the state, which will help pay rent if she finds a place.

Stacey explained that a section eight voucher is something that homeless people can apply for with the state. The vouchers are basically financial assistance given out by the state, but one cannot use the vouchers unless they have found a place through their own means. And Stacey said many homeless people are having trouble locating places to live.

Frustration at not finding a permanent home is taking its toll on Stacey.

"A lot of people are having a really hard time out there finding places," Stacey said. "I'm worried that once I get the voucher, I won't find anything. And some landlords around the state won't even take the vouchers. Another problem is that a lot of people who have the vouchers aren't willing to do the foot work to use them. I've actually seen that happen a lot. But meanwhile, the people who are really wanting to find a place are being made to wait."

Right now, Stacey said she is taking it day by day. The Carolina Hill shelter provides food for her and her daughter, so she is thankful for that.

"Food is taken care of as far as my daughter and myself go," she said. "If it wasn't, I really don't know what we'd do. Something better has to happen. I'd really like to get a job again, and start bringing some money back in. But I'm worried that as soon as I start something like that, I'll have to pick up and leave again."

As far as the holiday season goes, Stacey feels a little bit down.

"I don't really have any Christmas spirit this year, and that's weird, because it was always a good time of the year for me," she said. "This year it seems like just another day. I just didn't want to have me and my kids spending Christmas together in a shelter."

She added, "This can happen to anyone. I never saw myself living in a shelter—not because I thought I was too good for that, but because I thought it just could never happen."

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Hello to all of the parents, staffs, students and other interested people of our schools. I want to extend apologies to all of you for the absence of "Schools In" last week. As this is a relatively new column, I am still working out the glitches that arise. I know that with a little time, this column and page will grow and that the procedures needed to keep it flowing will all fall into place.

All news, stories, photos and any other pertinent information you may have, related to our schools, should be sent to me in the following manner by Mail: Jennifer Piepenbrink, 622 CJC Highway, Cohasset Phone: 923-1057(MediaOne line) Email: AroundTown/Schoolsin@AOL.com or jenpiep@yahoo.com Please email a copy of your photo only,(no text) to mford@cnc.com, with the text and photo coming to me.

This column is dedicated to providing all of you, the opportunity to read about events, programs of interest, activities that are happening within the schools and to read about upcoming meetings or other important dates. I would like to write about all grades from K-12 and be able to include as much as possible to keep us all updated on what is happening within our schools. Although we all know that their will be budget talks, things that take place that are frustrating and just plain problems, the positive things that are going on within the schools far outweigh these negatives. This column allows for us to read and see some of those wonderful events and programs. Starting next week, we will be back on track with this column and you will be able to read it weekly. Thank you and I look forward to a full column for us all to read! Jennifer Piepenbrink

Stage repairs made in time for musical

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Cohasset Music Department students can now "dance all night" in the middle/high school auditorium, after emergency repairs were made to the stage rigging system last month.

"..we took the cautious road and ruled the auditorium off limits until we could have the work done."

— Edward Malvey, superintendent of schools

The cast of the "King and I" on stage Dec. 15-17 at the Cohasset Middle-High School auditorium. For ticket information, call 383-9590.

The performance of the "King & I," scheduled to open Dec. 15, had originally been moved to Cohasset Town Hall after architects for the impending school renovation project questioned the integrity of the stage's rigging system.

"During the course of surveying it for renovations, there was some question on it," said Building Inspector Bob Egan. "Rather than fool around with it, we decided to replace it."

Egan said the ropes and wires supporting the drop and pulley systems that lowers and raises the curtains, scrims and scenery looked a "little frayed and worn." He said the rigging had been there since the auditorium was built in 1950.

Egan said the stage area wasn't "condemned" rather made off-limits to students as a safety precaution. "Nobody heard any noise, nothing fell down," he said.

Superintendent of Schools Dr. Edward Malvey said the questions arose over the summer as the entire school was being looked at as part of the school renovation project. The auditorium had undergone a major renovation a number of years ago, but the rigging was not updated at that time.

"The architect picked it up and decided some substantial work needed to be done up there," Malvey explained. "So we took the cautious road and ruled the auditorium off limits until we could have the work done."

The closure was forced to move the location of the production to Town Hall, because no one knew how long it would take to update the rigging system.

Though the stage was off limits, the auditorium wasn't. The building held two town meetings, and a college admissions seminar for high school students. Egan said Town Moderator George Marlette, who presided over the town meetings from the stage, was never in any danger while on the stage, but added jokingly "at least not from the rigging."

The repairs, because of a scheduling backup with the contractor, was finished last month at a cost of $12,000, according to Town Manager Mark Haddad.

"Everything is all brand new and shiny," said Egan.

Perhaps no one is more happy than the music department. "They will be holding the play in the high school auditorium," said middle/high school Principal Dr. Michael Jones. "They're ecstatic about it."

"The King & I" will be performed Dec. 15 and 16 at 7:30 p.m., and Dec. 17 at 2:30 p.m. Tickets are $8.

Safe driving

In addition to all the ongoing programs, "55-Alive" is being offered Dec. 7 and 14 at the community center. It is a program sanctioned by AARP. Its focus is to make participants aware of what may have become bad driving habits. So many older drivers who limit themselves to just driving locally, and are reluctant to give that up, will have a renewed sense of confidence and ability. The speaker is Cal White from Plymouth. Videos and question and answer are part of the program. Call the office for details, 383-9112.

Both sides claim victory in latest CHL battle

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

A Cohasset Conservation Commission decision regarding the embattled Cohasset Heights Landfill off Route 3A left both sides involved claiming a victory.

The commission ruled last week that it does have jurisdiction over CHL in accordance with a town bylaw regarding landfills affecting watershed areas, as Water Commission Chairman John McNabb hoped it would. But it also refused to take any enforcement actions against CHL, and instead decided to push for the completion of the capping process, as CHL owner Paul Barry wanted.

"Let's get it closed," said commission chairman Jim Dedes. "Everyone wants it closed."

CHL closed its doors more than two years ago, however has not been able to finalize a closure plan with the town and the state Department of Environmental Protection. A closure plan is a long-term plan that protects a community and its environment from the effects of a former landfill.

The issue came up after McNabb filed a Request for Determination of Applicability with the board, saying organic and inorganic contaminants have been found in both surface and ground water in the Lily Pond watershed area. A bylaw passed by the town in 1999 prohibits leachate from a solid-waste landfill to contaminate a watershed area. However, consultants for Barry said the town's bylaw conflicted with regulations of the DEP, which they said has jurisdiction over the landfill, not the conservation commission. CHL gave the commission a copy of the counter-RDA it recently filed with the state that would have the DEP claim jurisdiction.

"The Wetlands Protection Act protects the very same interests, the very same resource areas," said Roderick Gaskell, managing partner of the civil and environmental engineering firm SITEC, which was hired by CHL. "What public interest is served by taking away one barrel of a two-barrel shotgun? We want to make sure we have the state regulations available to us."

"I feel like a judge in Florida."

— Jim Dedes, conservation commission

DEP rules allow landfills to discharge as much as 20 percent of all leachate into the ground.

Gaskell also didn't believe the issue warranted the conservation commission to take any enforcement actions, as it did in 1996 when it ordered CHL to stop all sediment and possible leachate from draining into abutting wetlands.

"Sixty-plus testings have shown as a trend — one, any contamination has been confined to within the [landfill's] perimeter, and two, trends have been trending downward," he explained. "I can't see why it makes any sense for the conservation commission to get involved in an enforcement action."

He suggested the commission focus its energies on supporting CHL in its ongoing closure plan filed with the DEP. A plan to close CHL has been filed with the DEP for two years, said Gaskell, but no action has been taken in that time.

"Our position is that we're not doing anything to hold that process up," he added.

SITEC associate Ray Quinn contended that McNabb and the water commission's engineer, Norfolk Environmental, did not meet the burden of proof to say CHL was in violation of the bylaw.

He said a 1996 comprehensive site assessment of CHL said contamination wasn't moving towards the water supply. "It was true in 1996, and it continues to be true," he said. Quinn displayed water contamination charts for the commission and said all contamination levels are decreasing, and the only place volatiles exceeded standards were at the foot of the landfill. "But [the levels] are not high away from the foot," he explained.

Quinn also contended that groundwater in that area moves down gradient to the north and Great Swamp, rather than to the south and Lily Pond, as Norfolk contended.

Dedes insisted that the commission didn't want to get into a battle of competing hydrologists. He instead tried to refocus the meeting on whether the commission has jurisdiction over CHL. "I feel like a judge in Florida," he said about the deluge of statistics and legal challenges made.

But CHL owner Paul Barry said the issue shouldn't be who has jurisdiction, but rather what can be done to get a closure plan for the landfill. He called the process "political" and said the constant furor over CHL could be put to rest simply by capping it.

"This goes on and on and on and on," he said. "We all know it needs to be capped."

Barry thought any concerns about leachate would be addressed in the closure plan. But McNabb was skeptical that the DEP's requirements wouldn't be strong enough to protect the town.

Former commission chairman Thomas Callahan said though the DEP controls the capping process, the commission does have a say in it. "Do you have jurisdiction? Yes, it's a no brainer," he said. "The commission made that finding six years ago. It doesn't matter whether contamination is moving towards Lily Pond or Great Swamp, it's still contaminating wetlands."

Commission member Sue Cope agreed with Callahan. She added because she didn't know what type of enforcement action the commission could make, it should, instead, work with CHL to finalize the closure plan.

The commission voted unanimously to declare jurisdiction over the landfill site, but held off taking any enforcement action. The commission told CHL to file a Notice of Intent within 90 days, and submit a copy of the capping proposal currently in front of the DEP.

Though CHL balked at the 90-day requirement, Dedes said the commission just wants "to see some evidence the project is moving forward."

Afterwards, both McNabb and CHL claimed victory.

"It was a win. We got the commission to recognize CHL is within its jurisdiction," said McNabb, adding he never expected the commission to take any enforcement actions.

"Given the position the conservation commission is in, it was a fair and equitable decision," said Gaskell. He said CHL will create a closure plan under the auspices of the DEP's guidelines, while receiving the full backing of the town. "It will promote a more expeditious closure," he said.

SAFE opposes CHL expansion

SAFE today filed a petition with the Building Inspector to request a ruling that the proposed 27.5 acre Area 5 expansion of the Cohasset Heights Ltd. (CHL) landfill is not grandfathered and is prevented by the zoning change adopted at the March 25, 2000 Town Meeting.

"We are trying to stop the proposed CHL expansion once and for all," said SAFE member John McNabb. "The zoning change adopted at the March 25 Annual Town Meeting prevents any future solid waste uses in the new Technology Business District, where CHL is located, including the location of the proposed expansion. However, CHL may claim that they are grandfathered, and may file a Site Assignment Application for the landfill expansion, if the state lifts the landfill moratorium, as they are expected to do, next month" said McNabb.

"CHL most likely will claim that they are not subject to the new zoning, "said McNabb, "because they filed a Form A with the Planning Board before the Town Meeting, which usually "grandfathers" the land for three years. However, CHL is not grandfathered from the recent zoning change because it has already filed a Form A for the same property, in 1991 and 1996, and have already received their allowable grandfathering.

"Massachusetts Zoning Law gives a developer protection from zoning changes for three years, not six or nine years," said attorney Kevin F. O'Donnell, who filed a legal brief on behalf of the SAFE petition. "CHL has already received their three years of "grandfathering" and are not entitled to any more. Since the March 25, 2000 Town Meeting adopted zoning changes after CHL's grandfather status had expired, the CHL land is subject to the new zoning - which prohibits landfilling in that area."

CHL has apparently not given up on the landfill expansion, even though it was rejected by the Board of Health in 1996 and that decision was upheld by the courts. However, since then CHL has filed a Notice of Project Change with MEPA, which was approved last year, for the Area 5 expansion — which they cannot apply for unless the landfill moratorium is lifted, as expected, before the end of December.

COHASSET'S WEEK

Mercury ban

A group of residents are asking selectmen to support an article at the annual Town Meeting that would ban the sale of mercury thermometers in Cohasset.

On behalf of the 12 signers, John McNabb told the board in a letter this week that the ban would "eliminate a significant source of mercury that contaminates the environment." The request follows a similar ban the city of Boston enacted last month. Environmental Protection Agency Regional Administrator Mindy Lubber has called on all 351 cities and towns in Massachusetts to ban the retail sale of mercury thermometers.

In his letter, McNabb, who serves on the water commission, said the amount of mercury in one thermometer — one gram — "is enough to contaminate all the fish in a 20-acre lake, so it would take about two and a half thermometers to contaminate the fish in Lily Pond."

Arrowwood update

A Cohasset Water Commission "Request for Determination of Applicability" regarding certain lots of the Arrowwood housing development in Scituate was denied by the Cohasset Conservation Commission. The RDA had been requested by Water Commissioner John McNabb out of concern that the development, which abuts the Cohasset town line, could fall into the conservation commission's jurisdiction. McNabb is concerned that the development, particularly its septic systems, will adversely impact the town's water supply which is down gradient from Arrowwood.

Developer Steve Bjorklund said the nearest system is 215 feet from the reservoir. Current rules call for a 400-foot buffer zone, however the plan received its permits in 1995 when the requirement was 100 feet.

McNabb asked the Cohasset commission to either declare jurisdiction because of its proximity to the town, or require Bjorklund to file a Notice of Intent with the commission.

Conservation agent Paul Shea said Bjorklund recently reflagged the development's boundary lines, and installed a silt fence 100 feet away from the Cohasset line as a reminder for contractors not to encroach the buffer zone. He also said he has been in communication with the Scituate Conservation Commission, which promised to keep him notified on any changes to the project.

"Right now it is in Scituate's hands," he said.

Bjorklund said Cohasset would be kept informed. "We're not going to just forget about the town of Cohasset," he said. "If there any changes we'll tell you about them."

Winter DPW guidelines listed

The D.P.W. has issued the following winter guidelines:

1. Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15.
2. Do not plow or shovel snow, water or any other debris from private property onto roadways or sidewalks.
3. Uncover storm drains when possible.
4. Sand for resident use only will be available behind the former highway garage at 55R South Main St.
5. The town is not responsible for damaged lawns, fences, steps, shrubs, trees or mail boxes within the town layout.

Revaluation to get underway

The Cohasset assessors will conduct a state-mandated revaluation for fiscal year 2002. By law the assessors are mandated to value property within 10 percent plus or minus of the real estate market. Town meeting determines the budget within the constraints of Proposition 2-fi. A revaluation of property values cannot result in added town spending. When property values increase substantially the tax rate generally decreases. If market trends continue, there could conceivably be increases of property values from 20 to 30 percent in some neighborhoods. All other things being equal, if this is the case the tax rate will decrease by a like amount.

Cohasset along with most cities and towns in Massachusetts has been experiencing a robust real estate market due to the healthy economy. In an effort to keep pace with the appreciation in the market the assessors have conducted interim adjustments for fiscal year's 2000 and 2001. The overall valuation of the town increased by 6 percent for fiscal year 2000 and 7 percent for fiscal year 2001.

The Board of Assessors submitted to the Department of Revenue the necessary forms for the approval of the Fiscal 2001 Tax Rate after the annual classification hearing with the Board of Selectmen. The Board of Selectmen voted a single tax rate for Fiscal 2001. The new tax rate will be $14.59.

This press release was provided by the assessors' office at Town Hall.

POLICE BRIEFS

Rte. 3A accident

A Weymouth's woman 1998 Chevrolet van sustained about $4,000 in front-end damage following a two-car accident on Rte. 3A near Joseph's Hardware Sunday morning.

Police said Nicole Prevast, 20, of 25 Byron Road in Weymouth Landing was travelling northbound at about 11 a.m. when she was unable to stop hitting the rear end of a pickup truck driven by Edward L. Gorman, 38, of 12 Fourth Ave. in Scituate. Gorman had slowed down for traffic entering Joseph's Hardware at the time of the collision.

Police cited Prevast for failure to use care in stopping. There were no injuries, police said.

License violations

Selectmen will conduct hearings on alleged liquor license violations at Cohasset Plaza Liquors and Bernard's restaurant on Tuesday night.

Sgt. Robert Jackson said police officers noticed people inside Bernard's restaurant at 1:45 a.m., on Nov. 20. The restaurant's liquor license expires at 1 a.m. Jackson said police entered the establishment, spoke with management, cleared the place of customers, and reported the violation.

On Nov. 18, Jackson said Officer Jeffrey Treanor pulled over a car just after 8 p.m. for a traffic violation, and found a 19-year old Scituate man in possession of a 12-pack of Bud Lite and a bottle of Bacardi Rum. The man told Treanor he had purchased the alcohol from Cohasset Plaza Liquors. Jackson said Douglas was not in possession of a fake ID card at the time of his arrest.

No further information was available as the Mariner went to press.

Juvenile arrested

Following an internal investigation at Shaw's supermarket, police arrested a Scituate 16-year-old juvenile, who was employed at the store, and charged him with larceny of property over $250. The youth had apparently been stealing money from the store, Police Chief Brian Noonan said. "The store notified us about their desire to prosecute," he said. During the booking, police discovered the youth had marijuana in his possession. Police did not release the name of the youth because he is under 17 years of age.

OUI charged

Acting on a tip from a patron at a local restaurant, police arrested a 71-year-old Scituate man, John J. Shanahan of Country Way, and charged him with OUI (second offense) and failure to stay within marked lanes.

The patron reported that the man was intoxicated and described his car. Police were on the lookout and when the vehicle later showed up, police observed the driver crossing over the yellow line and subsequently made the arrest.

Ladies coffee and cookie swap: On Dec. 7 from 7:30-9:30 p.m., the club's monthly coffee will be held at the home of Mary McMeekin, 101 Nichols Road in Cohasset. Bake three dozen of your favorite Holiday cookies and go home with a variety of other guest's favorites.

Annual holiday open house: Whip up an hors d'oeuvres and join us on Saturday, Dec. 9 from 6- 9 p.m. at the home of Lisa and Richard Mullen, 26 Old Forge Road in Scituate. RSVP to Mary Richter, 383-0450 by Dec. 8.

Children's holiday party: This annual favorite will be held on Wednesday, Dec. 13 from 10 a.m. to 12 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church in Cohasset. There will be lots of fun and cheer, including the Music Lady! This event is open to all club members and their children. ($5 will be charged at the door for those not participating in the Moms and Tots program). RSVP by Friday, Dec. 8 to Christine McDonald at 383-2864.

Victorian fair

The Hull Lifesaving Museum is celebrating the season with its annual Victorian Seaside Holiday Fair, Saturday and Sunday, Dec. 9-10. The station is decorated with greens, bows, and holiday cheer, and the Museum Store is fully stocked with gifts, books, music, ornaments, children's toys, stocking stuffers, teacher gifts, and the museum's own exclusive clothing line — casual-wear sweats, hats, and long-sleeve Ts. Refreshments will be available to help keep holiday spirits high.

The fair will feature the hand-crafted wares of more than a dozen of the finest artisans from the region, jewelry, textiles, hand-turned wood, metal sculpture, soaps and bath oils, hand-painted boxes, wreaths, hand-made clothes, and seasonal novelties.

The admission and ample parking are free. Children are welcome and can play in the Navigation Loft while parents shop.

For more information, call Corinne Leung at the museum at 781-925-5433.

Children's author

Buttonwood Books & Toys in Cohasset will host Dean Morrissey on Saturday Dec. 9 from 1 –3pm. The Christmas Ship, written and illustrated by Dean Morrissey tells the story of Father Christmas visiting Sam, the local toy-maker, on Christmas Eve with a request for help. Sam has his own problem but with the help of his young friend Joey and a touch of magic they are able to see the task through and taste the true meaning of Christmas. The illustrations are wonderful and residents of the South Shore will want to look closely to see some familiar landmarks. Dean is a self-taught artist and believes that anyone can learn to draw with enough practice. He describes his presentation as an art workshop. Free. Please call (781) 383-2665 for more information or to order your signed copy.

LIBRARY CORNER

Santa Claus visits

You better watch out because Santa Claus is coming to the Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Sunday, Dec. 17 at 3 p.m. for all children or adults who would like to visit with him.

Santa accompanied by his elf, will entertain the children with holiday stories. There will be a departing treat for all good boys and girls. Join Santa for his first holiday visit at the library.

New in non-fiction

The following is a list of non-fiction books now available at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library:

• "Shakespeare's Language" by Frank Kermode. His book does what literary criticism should, it makes us want to read or reread the original texts.

• "The Snakebite Survivors' Club: Travel Among Serpents" Wildly exotic tales written by Jeremy Seal tell of one man's encounters with poisonous snakes in Australia, Kenya and elsewhere.

• "Golf Skills" written by Roger Hyde is a guide with full-color photographs that illustrate over 100 tips on improving your game.

• "Twilight of American Culture" urges individuals to renounce our "consumer culture" that disdains art, literature, critical thinking and enlightenment values. The author is Morris Berman and as one reviewer commented, "Quirky but dead serious."

Living the wild life

Norwell native Jeff Corwin debuts new show on Animal Planet

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Jeff Corwin discontinued his "Going Wild" show on the Disney Channel for only one reason—he wanted to do a show that was even more adventurous.

And he's doing it.

Corwin's new show called "The Jeff Corwin Experience" premiered Sunday, Dec. 4 on the Animal Planet channel at 8 p.m. Each episode is 60 minutes long, twice as long as the half-hour "Going Wild" show on the Disney Channel.

Corwin was off to Ecuador Friday to gather material for the new show —specifically to search for giant anacondas, but the Norwell native had the opportunity to bring his new show home. He held a premiere party last week at Mount Blue restaurant, where a small crowd gathered to watch a rough cut of the first episode of "The Jeff Corwin Experience."

Corwin said those who got the sneak preview gave the new show the thumbs up.

So far, Corwin has taped a number of different episodes of his new programs in various exotic countries around the globe. Within each episode, Corwin searches out and confronts different forms of the world's wildlife, from the meekest animals to the most lethal.

"I've been all over the place," Corwin said regarding the filming sessions of his new show. He said he recently returned from taping in Indonesia where he was looking for Komodo Dragons and alligators. He said other recent adventures included a trip to Alaska in search of moose, and even a trip to Borneo.

Animal Planet star and Norwell native Jeff Corwin gives the South Shore a sneak preview of his latest wildlife show "The Jeff Corwin Experience." With him at the Mount Blue premier party are Susan Leary and Mount Blue owners Jayne and Patrick Bowe.

And it's those kind of adventures that Corwin will be sharing with the millions of viewers he hopes will tune into his show every week.

It's a production that takes a lot of work by a lot of people, Corwin noted.

"A lot of hard work goes into the show. We have about 50 people working on each episode. One of the neat things about it is that 20 minutes of original score music is produced for each episode."

Corwin said for each one-hour show, 30 hours of tape is used. Each episode has to be thoroughly edited and "digitized" before the final product is released to the public.

"Unlike 'Going Wild,' the new show is one which is more geared to adults," Corwin said. "Nobody's excluded, but I just felt like I wanted to expand a little bit more. The new show is in a longer format, it has a higher-end production value, and it capitalizes on my sense of humor a little more than the other show did. And what's more, everything people see on the show is real— genuine. It's what I actually experience. There's a lot of dangerous situations portrayed on the show, but there's also a lot of adventure and a lot of humor."

Corwin said one of his most enthralling adventures which will eventually be featured on show was a trip he took to Thailand.

"While I was there, I hung out with these monks who rehabilitate tigers," Corwin said. "Once they have gotten better, the tigers there are allowed to roam around freely. They even attack people in a playful manner, but sometimes, that got dangerous. I actually had a tiger bite me in the shoulder."

"Everything people see on the show is real— genuine. It's what I actually experience. There's a lot of dangerous situations portrayed on the show, but there's also a lot of adventure and a lot of humor."
Jeff Corwin

Over the years, Corwin has had plenty of close encounters with animals few others would consider going near, including a nine-foot King Cobra. Some of Corwin's other adventures include a trip to a cobra festival in India, and a search for flying frogs in Arizona.

Corwin said in six weeks, he'll be taking what should be a fascinating journey to different regions of Africa where he'll be looking for cheetahs, chimpanzees, and different kinds of snakes.

Although situations on the show can get

'Nutcracker' 2000

A guide to the music, madness, mobs

By Alexander Stevens
CNC ARTS WRITER

City Lights

In a move that may upset ballet traditionalists, the Boston Ballet has made three surprising changes to its beloved production of "The Nutcracker" — just for starters, at four performances Clara will be played by a boy. Also, when Clara ascends in the balloon at the end of the show, three live doves will be released over the audience, and one of the dances at the Palace of Sweets will be an urban, rap-inspired dance more reminiscent of "Stomp" than "Balanchine."

Just kidding.

This is, in fact, the same familiar, beloved "Nutcracker" that Boston audiences have come to depend on every year to jolt them out of their Grinchiness and into the Christmas spirit. And audiences wouldn't want it any other way. There's something about Christmas that brings out the traditionalist in all of us. The day the Boston Ballet does something kooky to "The Nutcracker" is that day audiences will leave the Wang shaking their heads, and asking themselves one question: Why?

Never tamper with a crowd-pleaser.

Still, there are some smaller changes on stage, and simply getting to Wang Theatre may be a bigger challenge these days than ever before. So read on as we answer some questions about the music and the madness of "The Nutcracker."

I've heard so many good things about Tony Collins's Mother Ginger, I can't wait to see him perform the role. Which nights does he work?

Sorry, Tex, you're out of luck. You should have gotten to "The Nutcracker" in one of the last 34 years during which he performed the role. Collins has left the building, and he's taken his comic Mother Ginger with him. Next up it's four company dancers sharing the role that choreographer Daniel Pelzig describes as "Still funny, but more charming." Pelzig has made changes to this year's production — but still no break dancing at the Palace of Sweets.

"Tony was a classic," says Pelzig. "When he decided to retire, we thought, instead of replacing him, let's start fresh." Meet Mother Gigogne (French for Ginger), a kind of elegant French aristocrat. Expect a little more dancing and a little less farce from this Mother. And you'll be relieved to hear the polichinelles still dart out from under her

Making the trip to the city to see the Boston Ballet's Nutcracker has become an annual tradition for thousands of families throughout New England.

Hingham poet releases his first collection of verse

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

"A good poem gives artistic shape to the imagination. And a good poem can come from anywhere—a turn of a phrase, a few sounds, an incident, or even a recognition of a place. A good poem gives the reader a fresh take on the universe. It pulls us out of the every day and brings us to the absolute. Good poems can give aesthetic shape to our otherwise chaotic lives."
Aidan Rooney-Cespedes

His poetic spirit was nurtured in his homeland of Monaghan, Ireland but Aidan Rooney-Cespedes has released his first book of poetry as a South Shore resident. Cespedes will share some of the poems in his collection "Day Release," Dec. 6 at a special reading in Hingham's Aisling Gallery.

Cespedes, 35, lives in Hingham with his wife Insa and their two children. He came to this country 13 years ago and currently teaches English and French at Thayer Academy in Braintree. But his love of language goes beyond teaching—and into the lines and verses of his poetry.

"Ten days ago, I launched the book in Dublin, Ireland," Cespedes said. "But I wanted to do something around here to launch it around this area as well." He added when he was in Ireland, he had the opportunity to meet and take pictures with world-renowned Irish poet Seamus Heaney.

Cespedes said "Day Release" is a collection of poems that he has written during his life since college. He noted he's been working on and collecting the poems for the book for the past five years or so.

"About five years ago, I started thinking about putting a book together," Cespedes said. "I had won a few awards by that time, so I figured I would give it a try."

Cespedes' awards include the W.B. Yeats Society of New York International poetry competition in 1996 and the prestigious Hennessy Cognac New Irish Writing award for poetry in 1997. When he was 17, Cespedes won the Guinness Literary Award for one of his early poems. It was that first award as a teenager that led the poet to believe he could make a career of it.

"That early award corrupted me into thinking that poetry was something I could do for the rest of my life," Cespedes said.

The Hennessy award confirmed that fact. He won the award for a poem called "Turkey Plucking," which Cespedes called

Mortgage rates remain below eight percent

Experts see no drastic changes

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

Mortgage rates are the lowest they've been in weeks, and without making any extravagant predictions, mortgage experts say the trend may last at least another month or two.

Real Estate

A 30-year, fixed rate mortgage with no points is running at 7.87 as of late last week, according to Tom Zani of Dedham Savings Bank. That's one-eighth of a point lower than this time last year and more than a point lower than a couple of months ago, when rates were up over 8 points.

"The rates are good now compared to a few weeks ago, and I find that usually good trends run for a month or two, so the rates may flatten out for a while," said Zani.

But Zani is careful to note that the stock and bond markets are very volatile now, reflecting the lack of a decision in the presidential election.

"It all could change very easily, depending on the markets. With no one knowing what is going on, it could affect the markets negatively, and that could trickle down to the mortgage rates," he said.

Leo MacNeil of Brockton Credit Union said that rates there for a 30-year fixed rate loan are at 7.3 percent. MacNeil said he doesn't foresee much change in the rates with the new year.

"There may be some variation, but we don't see anything substantial over the next few months," he said. But MacNeil did note that the uncertainty over who the next

Sweet potato casserole

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Sweet potato casserole is one of those dishes which sounds great but which usually disappoints because it is too sweet, more like a sweet potato pie than a savory side dish. Although I am fond of mashed sweet potatoes, a sweet potato casserole usually uses slices and since sweet potatoes are softer and stickier than regular potatoes, this creates problems. This notion was confirmed when I tried recipes from the "Joy of Cooking" (sweet potatoes are combined with apple slices), "Fannie Farmer" (sweet potatoes combined with pork chops), James Beard's "American Cookery"(sweet potato purée), and, finally, a recipe from my own magazine, Cook's Illustrated (the texture was slippery and the flavor was too sweet). I also revisited one of my own recipes from "The Yellow Farmhouse Cookbook" which uses a combination of white and sweet potatoes mixed with bacon, thyme, and onion. It was good but still needed a bit of work.

These tests proved that precooking the sweet potatoes before baking them was problematic since it most often yielded soft, limp spuds. The Yellow Farmhouse method, adding the potatoes to a skillet, cooking them in salted water, and then finishing in the oven worked well. The starch leeched out into the liquid creating a sauce and the potatoes maintained their texture.

The first question was what sort of white potato is best. Testing proved that Yukon Gold was the favorite — it has a nice, rich, earthy flavor. Second choice was russets. For the sweet potatoes themselves, note that you will find many potatoes labeled "yams" in the market. These are almost always sweet potatoes since real yams are long tubular root vegetables. (In the early twentieth century, growers in Louisiana started using the term "yam" to differentiate their orange-colored sweet potatoes from the lighter, stringer variety grown in North Carolina.) For this recipe, I used the ubiquitous orange-colored sweet potato (often labeled as a yam) because they are the most common variety.

Now that the potatoes were settled, I researched other ingredients. Bacon was a good addition and it's best to cut the bacon into matchsticks. This method ensures that all of the bacon is evenly cooked and distributed throughout the dish. In my original recipe, I used salted water as the liquid but tested chicken stock instead which I preferred. I also tried different herb — rosemary, parsley, sage, bay, tarragon — but settled on thyme since it goes so well with potatoes. Finally, I sautéed leeks and onions in the skillet before adding the potatoes and this added great depth of flavor.

SWEET POTATO CASSEROLE

Remember that "yams" in the supermarket are actually sweet potatoes so go ahead and use them in this recipe. If you do not have a large ovenproof skillet (at least 12 inches) the recipe can be prepared through Step 2 and then transferred to a 9 x 13 inch baking dish before beginning Step 3.

If you want a good, simple mashed sweet potato recipe, peel and boil until tender 1 1/2 pounds of sweet potatoes. Mash with 2 tablespoons butter, 2 tablespoons cream, and 1 tablespoon sherry. Place in a baking dish and pour 2 tablespoons molasses mixed with 1 teaspoon melted butter on top. Bake at 350 degrees for 25 minutes. If you like, broil for 5 minutes to brown the top.

4 slices thick cut bacon cut into matchsticks or 1/8 inch slices

2 tablespoons olive oil

3/4 pound or one medium onion, thinly sliced

3/4 pound or one medium leek, white part only, thinly sliced (optional)

1 pound or about 2 medium Yukon Gold or Russet potatoes, peeled and thinly sliced

1 pound or about 2 medium sweet potatoes, thinly sliced

3/4 teaspoon salt dissolved in 1 cup low sodium or homemade chicken stock

2 teaspoons minced fresh thyme or 1 teaspoon dried freshly ground black pepper to taste

1. Heat the oven to 350 degrees and adjust a rack to the middle position. Cook the bacon in a large ovenproof skillet over medium high heat. Drain on paper towels and set aside. Pour off all but 2 tablespoons fat.

2. Add olive oil to the pan, heat, and add onion and leek. Sauté over medium heat, stirring occasionally, for about 8 minutes or until soft but not browned. Add the bacon, potatoes, stock/salt mixture, thyme and pepper. Fold, using a heatproof rubber spatula, until well mixed and the liquid has started to thicken about 2-3 minutes.

3. Cover the pan with aluminum foil and bake in the preheated oven for 30 minutes. Uncover and bake an additional 20-30 minutes or until the potatoes are cooked through (test with a skewer) and the top is browned. Serves 6 to 8 as a side dish.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 6

The planet Mercury takes the spotlight today. Mercury aligns with Neptune in the afternoon and Jupiter this evening. Combined with an impulsive Aries moon, its influence may tempt you to overdo, overextend. Don't make foolish promises or spur of the moment decisions you will later regret. Slow down. On the other hand, influences today are prime for getting things done. Roll up your sleeves and stay busy with practical projects. A rough spot is in effect between 8:50-11:50 p.m., when the moon opposes Mars. Keep a cool head. Know when it's time to call it a night.

THURSDAY, DEC. 7

An Aries moon continues to set a quick pace today. Sidestep irritability, impatience. Take it slow and easy. Channel high energy constructively. Make up a list of things to do and stick to it. At 3:22 p.m. the Aries moon becomes inactive until 4:27 p.m., when a Taurus moon takes over. A lunar alignment to Neptune makes this a great evening to mellow out and get extra rest.

FRIDAY, DEC. 8

Fair and sunny astrological weather arrives today. The planet Venus enters Aquarius at 3:49 a.m., remaining there until January 3. The moon continues its travel in Taurus. Applying alignments of the sun/Uranus and Jupiter/Neptune also affect the day. All group efforts, charitable endeavors get the green light. Work to assist people who are less fortunate than yourself or for causes you believe in. The evening is prime for social activities. Gather with friends and enjoy life to the fullest.

SATURDAY, DEC. 9

A full moon buildup makes this a weekend that can go either way. A positive attitude and flexible schedule are keys to success. Energy and enthusiasm run high. This is an ideal time for holiday preparations, gift buying, decorating and enjoying holiday festivities. Today the Taurus moon aligns with Saturn at 1:00 p.m. and becomes inactive. A lively Gemini moon takes over at 7:50 p.m. This moon aligns with Venus and Jupiter this evening, making it one of the best for partying. Let the good times roll.

SUNDAY, DEC. 10

A full moon buildup cautions you to channel high energy constructively. This is not a typical laidback lazy Sunday. Tackle a variety of projects and get them out of the way. You can be most productive, if you are well organized. Lunar oppositions to Mercury and Pluto this afternoon warn you to think things through before you take action; stop and reconsider. Social gatherings continue to get the green light this evening. Put on your party hat and go for the good times.

MONDAY, DEC. 11

The full moon culminates at 4:03 a.m., 20-degrees of Gemini/Sagittarius. At 9:15 a.m. the moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive until 8:48 p.m. A mixed bag of planetary influences are in effect today. Keep a low profile. All important signings, decisions, new ventures are definitely off limits. An applying alignment of Mercury/Pluto warns you to choose your words carefully. This is a day to finish old business, tie up loose ends, clean out and reorganize. Venus aligns with Jupiter and Neptune, prompting you to focus on holiday preparations. The moon enters domestic Cancer at 8:48 p.m.

TUESDAY, DEC. 12

Planetary action calms down considerably today, bringing an opportunity to focus on important projects and make decisions. Home, family and domestic issues may demand your attention. Be more nurturing, sensitive; listen to your heart. If you have a clear plan of action and stick to it, you can be most productive. Spend quality time with loved ones this evening.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 13

Take advantage of relatively mild astrological influences and plan to get a lot accomplished today. Initiate new enterprises before 2:03 p.m., when the Cancer moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. Handle routine chores and errands during the remainder of the afternoon. A playful Leo moon takes over at 9:09 p.m.

THURSDAY, DEC. 14

The combination of a Leo moon and applying Mercury/Uranus alignment makes for an exciting day. Keep an open mind. Follow your intuition. Experiment with new ideas and be willing to try new experiences. Avoid rigid time schedules; be more spontaneous. New beginnings across the board are recommended. You can launch ventures, make decisions, start new activities in your personal or professional life. Influences top the charts for partying this evening.

FRIDAY, DEC. 15

A Leo moon continues to generate an upbeat mood. Get an early start. You can be very productive this morning. There is a rough spot, however, at 2:57 p.m., when the moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. You may encounter delays or obstacles. Keep it light. Go with the flow. The moon enters practical Virgo at 10:30 p.m.

SATURDAY, DEC. 16

An ambitious Virgo moon affects the weekend and makes it one to get things done. This is not a favorable time for launching important new enterprises, but it is ideal for handling a variety of projects, odds and ends of things, cleaning and reorganizing. A lunar alignment to Pluto may spark emotional thunderstorms this evening. Choose your words carefully. Compliments will work better than criticism.

SUNDAY, DEC. 17

The best way to channel today's planetary influences is to stay busy. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. You can be most productive. Stress management is important. Don't get caught up in worries, self-doubts, irritability. Look on the bright side of things. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 7:41 p.m., when the Virgo moon becomes inactive. Take extra quiet time out for yourself. Meditate for inner peace.

MONDAY, DEC. 18

The astrological stage is being set for one of the best holiday seasons in many years. Projects should come together smoothly. People will be outgoing, upbeat. The moon enters Libra at 2:01 a.m., forming easy aspects to Jupiter and Neptune in the morning. In addition, a harmonious alignment of the sun and Mars brings an energy boost, extra motivation to get things done. This day is ideal for gift-buying, wrapping, decorating. Plan a romantic evening with the love in your life.

Hingham poet releases his first collection of verse

"A quickening swill from the bottle of Bush, making its way around the shed, sweet pabulum of my first kill. A neighbor from townlands over urges me on, get it over and done, we don't have all night. The other men tune in, as I hunker down and grasp the purple neck, thicker than gym rope, the life blood thundering through the jugulars...."

"It was a pretty big award for what I consider to be a rite of passage poem," Cespedes said of the Hennessy award.

Poetry was always in Cespedes' blood. He began writing poems while attending the National University of Ireland, where he graduated with a degree in English and French literature.

"After college, I went and lived in Paris," Cespedes said. "That's actually where I met my wife. At the time, she was just a student from America studying in France. We met, and we fell in love."

But after a year of living in Paris, Cespedes decided he wanted to go back to school in Ireland to do some post-graduate work. He did just that and kept a long-distance relationship with Insa. Cespedes got his master's degree in education, married Insa, and moved to Texas in 1987.

In 1988, Cespedes took the job at Thayer and relocated to Hingham with his wife.

"I wasn't writing poetry at all at that time," Cespedes said. "I got the job at Thayer, I was married, and we had two kids. There were other things that were on my mind."

In 1994, Thayer gave Cespedes the opportunity to travel back to his native Ireland to take a seminar on William Butler Yeats, the legendary poet.

"That whole thing really inspired me to start writing poetry again, and to start looking at all the ones I had already written," Cespedes said. And so he did—that twinge of inspiration the spawned Cespedes' new book of poetry which is now being sold on local bookshelves.

Even though Cespedes said many of his poems are grounded in his rural Irish background, he said his poetic subject matter deals with a variety of concepts.

"There's quite a bit of variety among the poems," he said. "I don't know if the poems carry any particular themes though—that's up for the critics to decide."

Cespedes classified himself as a "new formalist" poet, one who writes in a very "lyrical" tradition. But like his poetic subject matter, Cespedes writing style also fluctuates.

"Poetry is a tough market because on one hand, you're trying to be critically accepted," Cespedes said. "On the other hand, you're also trying to measure up to the standards of the public. It was impossible for me to write for a number of years because of things like my job and my family. I'm definitely glad I started again because when I'm not writing, I'm not as happy as I could be."

Cespedes is starting to ponder starting to work on a new book of poetry. He has a ritual these days in order to keep himself writing.

"Every morning in the summer, I write for three hours," he said. "With age comes a certain amount of additional discipline. But writing a second book of poetry is very daunting to me because traditionally, it's got to be better than the first. A second book is really a first attempt at a career in poetry. For me, it's just about a desire to keep writing."

And when it comes to what elements make a good poem, Cespedes has a lot to say.

"A good poem gives artistic shape to the imagination," he said. "And a good poem can come from anywhere—a turn of a phrase, a few sounds, an incident, or even a recognition of a place. A good poem gives the reader a fresh take on the universe. It pulls us out of the every day and brings us to the absolute. Good poems can give aesthetic shape to our otherwise chaotic lives."

To purchase his new book called "Day Release," visit local book shops like Book Port in Hingham or Buttonwood Books in Cohasset. Cespedes' new book is also available online at Amazon.com.

rather hazardous at times, Corwin said danger is the name of the game for him, and it's what people want to see on television.

"You just have to confront certain things and you don't want to blow it or else the footage won't get used," Corwin said of the various animal encounters on the show. "If I feel fear in a given situation, which I haven't yet, I'd pull myself out of it. Nobody wants anyone else to get hurt, so we're careful. If a situation is honestly too dangerous, I won't put myself in it. But it would have to be extremely dangerous."

Prior to his career on the small screen, Corwin made documentaries designed for classroom settings. But he always saw television as a powerful teaching tool and a way to educate the public on the world around us.

"During that time, I became very intrigued by the idea of using TV to spark an interest in the natural resources of the planet," he said. "And my goal was always to have my own TV series. When 'Going Wild' started four years ago, I was very satisfied with the program. I loved doing that show but now I feel like I'm doing a show that's really going to let natural history unfold before people's eyes."

Corwin said his early inspiration came from nature-hunting around Norwell and getting involved with the South Shore Natural Science Center, which he is still involved with today.

"Ever since I was six or seven years old, I've been interested in wildlife," Corwin said.

Since the success of "Going Wild," Corwin has become the focus of an interactive exhibit at Universal Studios.

"I'm excited about everything that's happening," he said. "I never thought it would get this big for me."

When Corwin is not working, he is home on the South Shore fishing, eating, kayaking, and spending time with his wife Natasha. Corwin said sometimes, Natasha comes along on his worldly voyages.

"Doing these kinds of shows gives me the freedom and the opportunity to go to all these places in the world that I've dreamed about," Corwin said. "To think I actually get a paycheck for that, it's awesome. I get to do what I love to do. Isn't that what we all strive for. Sometimes it's tough to work those 16-hour days but then you pinch yourself and say, 'Hey, I'm living out my dream,' and it makes it all worthwhile."

Too much negotiation can sour P&S agreement

By Anthony Summers
CORRESPONDENT

John Fitzgerald Kennedy said, "Let us never negotiate out of fear, but let us never fear to negotiate." Negotiation is an art. A clever negotiator is a skilled bargainer, an incessant haggler, (not Marvin) a determined dickerer. But over-negotiation can sometimes turn around and bite the negotiator. It was over-negotiation which resulted in the litigation entitled DiCenzo vs. Collins and Varrichone.

Background

Mary Collins was the mother of Grayce DiCenzo, the plaintiff, and William Collins, the defendant.

Anthony Summers

Mary died on April 11, 1998, owning a home. Mary's will was not specific as to the disposition of the home. On Oct. 28, 1998, the family elected to accept DiCenzo's written offer to purchase the house for $123,000. DiCenzo and her brother, William Collins, the executor, agreed to execute a purchase-and-sale agreement (P&S) by Nov. 4, 1998. On Oct. 29, 1998, Collins delivered a P&S to DiCenzo. DiCenzo failed to sign the P&S and on or about Nov. 29, 1998, Collins sent a letter to DiCenzo advising her that her offer would be null and void unless the P&S was signed by Nov. 30, 1998.

Apparently, DiCenzo felt she could string the deal out a little longer because she advised Collins that the P&S was not acceptable to her bank. Believing that DiCenzo did not intend to honor her offer, Collins advised her that he intended to sell the house to a third party. On Dec. 21, DiCenzo complained about the lead paint and suggested the price should be lowered.

On March 26, 1999, Collins again offered the house to DiCenzo at the $123,000 price. She declined. At long last, on Aug. 4, 1999, Collins accepted an offer of $145,000 from Marie Varrichone (defendant). DiCenzo was given the right to match that price. Of course, she declined. On Oct. 5, 1999, the deed to Varrichone was recorded. In April, 2000, six months after the sale to Varrichone, DiCenzo commenced an action in Superior Court requesting an order of specific performance of the offer of Oct. 28, 1998. In other words she was asking the court to order that the house be sold to her for the original price of $123,000.

Discussion of law

In the 1999 case of McCarthy vs. Tobin, the Court held that a written offer to purchase is also a binding contract. The Court went on to hold that a P&S signing deadline may be informally waived based on the actions of the buyer and seller. In other words, even though the written offer required a P&S to be signed in seven days, the back and forth dialogue between Collins and DiCenzo can be considered to be a mutual waiver of the deadline. However, a deadline cannot be waived beyond a reasonable time, and at some point all obligations in the offer will expire. "When parties sign an otherwise binding offer to purchase real estate and subsequently agree by their words or conduct or communication to abandon the date previously established for signing a P&S, the offer to purchase remains binding only for a reasonable period of time."

Decision

On Dec. 21, 1999, DiCenzo effectively terminated her rights under the original offer by notifying Collins that she wanted to pay less than $123,000. After that point there was no further meeting of the minds between DiCenzo and Collins. The only time the parties were bound was between Oct. 28, the date of the offer, and Dec 21, the date on which DiCenzo attempted to lower the price. Subsequent to Dec. 21, there was never another agreement.

Finally, in spite of numerous opportunities between Oct. 28, 1999, and Oct. 5, 2000, DiCenzo never made an effort to purchase the house which was sold to Varrichone Oct. 5, 2000. The long-standing common law rule of estoppel provides that "he who can speak but does not, shall not when he will." Simply put, it's over for DiCenzo, and her case was dismissed.

Legal advice

Specificity, precision and written attention to dates are essential to keep control of your real estate deal. The enforceability of your rights in a real estate transaction are determined by the clarity of your contract.

Just as water always finds the crack in the glass, the enforceability of your purchase depends on the crack-free quality of your purchase-and-sale agreement.

Relocation of Conway's office celebrated

Nearly 120 people attended a recent reception to mark the reopening of the Conway sales center in Weymouth. The office was formerly in Weymouth Landing, but was moved to accommodate a growing staff.

The new office is located at One Union Street, near South Shore Hospital in Columbian Square. Founded in 1957, Jack Conway & Co. is the largest independently owned real estate firm in Massachusetts, with 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod. The organization recently was named the 77th largest realty company in the United States by REALTOR® Magazine, the official publication of the National Association of Realtors. Shown below at the event are President Dick Cahill, Conway Financial Services President Carol Bulman, Weymouth Assistant Superintendent of Schools Joe Rull, Office Manager Karen Golden, and Chairman Jack Conway.

Conway agents earn designation for proficiency in technology

Four Jack Conway & Co. sales agents were the first to receive the Conway Computer Institute (CCI) designation, an honor they obtained after completing 36 hours of intensive coursework in using technology to better serve real estate customers.

Dave Duross of Canton, Carolyn Flaherty of Quincy, Mani Barrett and Susan Gray of Marshfield, and Business Development Director Paul Sanders were awarded CCI certificates and pins by Technology Director Toni Manning and Executive Vice President Tom Rudolph.

Classes on creating mailing lists, managing client databases and using desktop publishing were taught by instructors from Massasoit Community College at Conway's in-house computer-training laboratory.

Manning taught courses on navigating the Internet, effectively communicating with customers by e-mail, and a special module on Conway's state-of-the-art information-management system.

After completing the requirements, the CCI designees received a $500 gift certificate to CompUSA, the computer superstore.

"Technology is so important in today's market," said Manning, adding that the CCI designation is believed to be the first of its kind to be offered by a real estate firm.

"These people have shown their commitment to education by earning this designation." Founded in 1957, Jack Conway & Co. is the largest independently owned real estate firm in Massachusetts, with 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod. The organization recently was named the 77th largest realty company in the United States by REALTOR® Magazine, the official publication of the National Association of Realtors.

Home Buyers: Discover How to Avoid These 6 Costly Mistakes Before You Buy

A new report has just been released which identifies the 6 most common and costly mistakes that homebuyers make before buying a home.

Mortgage regulations have changed significantly over the last few years, making your options wider than ever. Subtle changes in the way you approach mortgage shopping, and even small differences in the way you structure your mortgage, can cost or save you literally thousands of dollars and years of expense.

Whether you are about to buy your first home, or are planning to make a move to your next home, it is critical that you inform yourself about the factors involved before you buy.

Local chefs, businesses give thanks with food

Alison Godburn of Coldwell Banker Hunneman and David Waters of Community Servings took part in the annual "Pie in the Sky" fund-raiser and got some baking tips from Chef Daniel Bruce of the Boston Harbor Hotel.

More than 150 of Boston's best chefs, restaurants, caterers and hotels donated their time and resources to prepare more than 12,000 Thanksgiving pies which were sold to benefit the clients of Community Servings.

Mortgage rates stay below 8 percent president will be may have an effect on rates at some point.

"Any kind of uncertainty can play out in the bond markets, so we have to keep an eye on that, but for now, things are good for home buyers," he said.

What mortgage experts are noticing now is that rates seem to be staying below 8 percent. "Rates over eight may be a thing of the past," said MacNeil. "Although things of the past do often come back," cautioned MacNeil.

Commerce Department figures released Nov. 29 showed that the gross domestic product — the total output of the U.S. economy — grew at an annual rate of just 2.4 percent in the third quarter, the slowest growth rate in four years, which allowed rates to slip down. As a result, mortgage hunters should continue to enjoy relatively low rates for the time being.

But should prospective home buyers snag a good rate now, or hope they will go down even lower with the new year? That's hard to call, according to experts.

"It's really up to the individual home buyer and their needs," said Christopher Sangello of CRS Mortgage in Plymouth. Sangello said it may be better for someone looking for a 30-year fixed rate to obtain a mortgage now, for example, but better for someone looking for a second mortgage to wait.

"For a second mortgage, you can wait it out for a lower rate. You really have to sit down with a broker and do the numbers. There are tax issues, too, to consider," he said.

Sangello said that homeowners or prospective homeowners need to find out if the additional deductions will be more beneficial in the current or next year.

If you want to increase your deductions for the coming year, then you may want to wait until the new year. The normal allowable home purchase deductions will be the points, interest, and property taxes you pay. Sangello said that he thinks rates will stay about the same for a few more weeks, then there may be some slight fluctuation.

"I think things are in kind of a holding pattern with the presidential election in limbo. It's a good time now to get a mortgage, I'm telling people, if they're ready now to buy," he said.

"I think after the new year starts, there may be some changes, but even then I don't think it will be anything drastic," he said.

South Shore dinner theaters serve up the sounds of the season

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

The cast of "What Christmas Means to Me," which runs from Dec. 6-12 at Raffael's in North Quincy.

The Quincy-based J. M. Productions will present its annual holiday show, "What Christmas Means To Me," from December 6-12 at Raffael's in North Quincy. Although it is the final show in J.M.'s first season at the State Street complex restaurant, it is actually the sixth time producer and performer John F. McDonald, Jr., will present the sentimental musical revue on the South Shore.

In addition to McDonald, who also directs, the cast includes Kathy Teevens Fitzpatrick of Quincy, Ann Kenneally-Ryan of Braintree, and Sheila Fahey and James Riley of Neponset. Robert Goldman of Norwood will again serve as music director.

Tickets for "What Christmas Means To Me" are $40, with a choice of entree, with performances from December 6-12. Senior citizen matinees, which are open to audiences of all ages, are $30 per person and will be held on Dec. 6 and 11. For more information, call 617/786-7469.

Producer and Performer Douglas A. Trudeau brings his Showstoppers Dinner Theater home to The Golden Rooster in Scituate for "A Christmas Carol-On the Air," through December 10. This production of the beloved Charles Dickens classic combines live theater with old time radio. The show is set in a 1930s radio station during a live broadcast of 'A Christmas Carol" with dinner theater patrons playing the part of the old time radio audience as the cast of seven actors gets ready to go live on the air. The fictional radio station's one-man band enhances the proceedings with everything from incidental music to a host of holiday music.

"The magic of live radio lies in the ability of actors to arouse the audience's imagination through the use of their voices," according to Trudeau. "The seven actors bring to life all the cherished characters including Bob Cratchit, Tiny Tim, Jacob Marley and, of course, mean old Ebenezer Scrooge using their voices while at the same time creating a sound portrait of Scrooge's adventure from a table full of sound props."

Tickets for the evening performances of "A Christmas Carol - On the Air" are $42 per person, with December 6 and 7 matinees priced at $32. For entree selections and other information, call Showstoppers at 781/545-3182.

The Quincy Dinner Theater, under the auspices of Braintree-based Producer George Stevens, will present its annual musical holiday party, "Love Changes Everything," through December 17 at the Quincy Masonic Temple in Quincy Center.

The show features a cast of 22 South Shore area singers, dancers and actors. Tickets are $35, which includes a full meal. For reservations and further information, call 781/843-5862.

skirt (like we said, you don't tamper with a crowd-pleaser).

What advice do you have if I want to try to avoid a crowd when I go see "The Nutcracker"?

Stay home. Hey, folks, there's 6 billion-plus people on this planet, and, judging by the attendance figures for this ballet, most of them are planning to attend "The Nutcracker" this year. So it may feel like 1.2 billion of those people are in the Wang lobby during intermission on the night you attend. In short: You're going to run into people, literally and figuratively — there's no dodging it. And at the risk of sounding like the reformed Scrooge, that's part of the point. The people are part of the reason you're attending the show. God has thrown them in — like snowflakes — as part of the flavor, no extra charge.

But there are tips you should remember if you want to make this a fun night out with the kids, rather than a scene from one of those disastrous family excursions in "Malcolm in the Middle."

Don Sturdy, director of artistic operations, has seen more than a few family disasters during his tenure with the Ballet and the Wang, and he says the trick is to leave plenty of time.

"People who don't normally come to the theater don't anticipate the extreme amount of traffic," he says, adding that parking in the Theater District is tighter than ever. He says that people should take advantage of the two nearby subway stops in the Orange Line (New England Medical Center) and the Green Line (Boylston). Added bonus of taking Green Line: You get to see the beautiful lights in the park

What if I get there late? What will happen?

Does the term "tough luck" mean anything to you? If you get there after the show has started, you're watching Act I from the back hall — a pill that's particularly hard to swallow after you've shelled out a substantial amount of money for four seats in the orchestra. It's hard to seat patrons after a ballet has started, so don't be late.

How long is the show?

Two hours, including intermission. And in a nice nod to the fact that this is a family event, evening performances start at 7:30 p.m.

How old should a child be to see the show?

Five and up. But be considerate of the people who shelled out good money to sit next to you. If your child will be restless or talky during the show, wait a year or two to bring them — this show isn't going anywhere.

Any tips for the little ones?

Yes, bring a booster seat (or a couple of blankets to sit on). The Wang has some booster seats, but they run out fast in a show like this.

If I get there early, what can I do?

First, congratulate yourself for your organizational gifts. Then, spend the time feeling superior to the people who are white-knuckling it at that very moment on the Mass Pike. But there are also some other things you can do to pass the time. The Ballet has spruced up the lobby for this year's event — and on certain nights patrons will be serenaded by a brass trio from the New England Conservatory or caroling kids. For more info on those special events, call (617) 456-6230.

How, in the name of Tchaikovsky, is Act I of "The Nutcracker" related to Act II?

Good question. No one's really figured that one out. But Pelzig is giving it the old college try. He says that in reworking "Nutcracker" this year, he's brought a little "Theater 101 to the ballet stage," and he's tried to create more of a dramatic through-line in the show. In order to do that, he's asking director-type questions like, "Who are these people?" Of course, questions like that only get you so far when the answers are, "It's a giant dancing mouse with a gun." He's also streamlined the production.

"I've tried to make acts flow better, eliminated unnecessary set changes, and made the storytelling clearer," he says.

Halfway through last year's "Nutcracker," I figured out the ballet is actually a well-disguised piece of conservative propaganda. Clara comes to realize that a Bohemian way of life filled with dance and art can never be more than a sweet dream, and that she must return to the "real world," where business and commerce have created the life of wealth and privilege into which she has obviously been born. Right?

Wrong.

"There are version of 'The Nutcracker' that get very dark and psychological," says Pelzig. "This isn't one of them."

"The Nutcracker" plays through Dec. 31 at the Wang Theatre, in Boston. Tickets are $12-$62. Call (800) 447-7400.

TWA comes through

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. In January 2000, my wife was diagnosed with kidney cancer, and starting in May we had to fly every month from St. Louis to San Francisco because she was put on a trial medication by a medical center there. We flew on TWA in May and June, and immediately after she was seen by her doctor in June, we booked a flight on TWA for July 27, her next appointment date.

My wife died on July 4, 2000. I requested a refund from TWA for both of our tickets, explaining that I had to accompany my wife on every trip since she was ill, in a wheelchair and handicapped by her disease. I had no other reason to fly to San Francisco, nor do I have the intention to fly anywhere else within the next year.

TWA refunded my wife's fare but only offered to let me use my old ticket on a future date minus a $75 charge. I realize that the tickets are nonrefundable, however, I feel that under these circumstances I should get a full refund for my tickets.

Can you help get my money back?

A. I think you've suffered enough already and TWA seems to agree. They extend their condolences on your loss and will refund your ticket purchase price in full.

Q. Last April, I flew with TWA to Cancun. Upon check-in, I was told that I needed a notarized letter from my husband giving me permission to take my 11-year-old son to Mexico without his father.

My complaint centers around the fact that I was enticed to book direct with the airline on their Web site, and when I entered the data it clearly showed that I was traveling with my son, who was 11. There was nothing to inform me that I needed a letter. As a result, I did not arrive in Mexico until 8 that evening rather than my original time of 11:30 a.m. It was a very harrowing day to say the least.

I sent the airline a letter asking for compensation, but all they sent me were some vouchers offering a small discount on a future flight. Can you help me to resolve this issue?

A. As is the case with every airline, TWA maintains that it is the passenger's responsibility to know all the laws governing travel to foreign destinations (this includes visa requirements). The rule requiring a notarized letter is in response to the incidence of parents who abduct their own children in custody battles, and is there for everyone's protection.

This is one of the downsides of booking travel on the Internet rather than using an experienced travel agent, who might have warned you of applicable regulations beforehand.

Q. I just wanted to give you some feedback on Priceline.com, which you mentioned in a previous column. I use the service frequently and have been very pleased overall.

Since you do have to relinquish some control (you don't have a say in airlines, hotels and flying times), and reservations are nonrefundable, it's not for everyone. But I have gotten round-trip tickets to London for $325 (in high season no less) and have stayed at the San Francisco Hilton for $75 a night over a holiday weekend.

Last spring, on the night before a trip to London, my father had a stroke and was rushed to the hospital. I called Continental Airlines from the hospital explaining I couldn't make the flight. After 30 minutes of wrangling I was told that I needed to call Priceline.

I expected to get a "tough break, you're getting squat" attitude. Instead, they said that if I faxed proof of a hospital admission they would refund my money. The compassionate, quick way the problem was dealt with made me a believer.

A. Clearly, Priceline has great prices. And, it appears that in many cases they will refund money paid in the case of true hardship. But travelers should be aware of their inflexibility when it comes to most changes.

Grow fruit-bearing shrubs for fall and winter color

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Crystalline blades of grass sparkled in the slanted rays of the rising sun as I gazed out through frosted window panes to the diamond-dusted lawn below on this chilly December morn. Nearly all the trees have shed their leaves revealing their unique architecture, their winter silhouettes reminiscent of a pen and ink sketch. Despite the beauty to be found in the winter landscape, prolonged cold and a final farewell to the growing season create a sense of sadness for many avid gardeners who long to till the earth and witness the miracle of growing plants. Even those who welcome a respite from gardening chores, feel a sense of loss as the brilliant colors of summer and autumn are replaced by the subtle browns and grays of the winter landscape.

Green thumbs up

Frigid temperatures and frozen ground have compelled this weary gardener to turn my attentions to the holiday season and abandon all hope of finishing my latest gardening projects. While the tightly furled leaves of the rhododendrons outside my window suggest that this cold weather is here to stay, there are sure to be several relatively warm days this month which should enable me to heel in several dozen forlorn orphan perennials, trees and shrubs which linger in pots along the back walkway, even if only to prepare a trench in the vegetable garden and sink these forsaken children, pot and all, in soil, leaves and mulch until the arrival of spring. Several bags of forgotten daffodil bulbs will require last minute potting or planting during these warmer periods, as well, as final preparations for winter weather are hastily undertaken.

For the moment, my energies are focused on holiday decorating. As I begin the process of gathering greens, branches and berries for wreaths, swags and centerpieces, I delight in the diverse colors and textures of various evergreen foliages and the brightly tinted fruit to be found in my landscape. While some of these plants will be trimmed only sparingly for decorations, and others may not be particularly suited for indoor use, their value in the landscape, especially during the winter months, cannot be understated. Vividly-colored fruits add pizzazz to an often drab, stark, dormant planting with the added benefit of attracting wildlife.

The robust family of Viburnums offers many worthy, berry-producing species. Fruits range in color from yellow to shades of orange and red in addition to blue, black and often a progression of colors as the berries mature. Among the most ornamental members of this large group of vigorous shrubs are the hardy European cranberry bush (V. opulus) and the American cranberry bush (V. trilobum), which exhibit flat clusters of creamy white flowers in spring followed by spectacular red foliage in fall and fabulous bunches of shiny, bright red berries which persist through much of the winter. Although several popular varieties display deliciously fragrant flowers, few of these sweetly-scented cultivars reliably produce attractive fruits. The Viburnum family tends to be tolerant of many soil types and low light conditions although most prefer moisture-retentive soils.

The startling, purple berries of the beautybush (Callicarpa) make this small, deciduous shrub a unique addition to the shrub border. In mid- to late-summer, bundles of tiny amethyst-colored flowers appear followed by tiny violet beads in dense clusters along the woody stems. Grow in full sun or dappled shade in well-drained soils. Prune severely in early spring to maintain a compact, dense habit and to promote more fruit.

Few plant families can rival the beauty of the holly (Ilex spp.) There are both evergreen and deciduous types and dozens of varieties from which to choose. The majority of popular cultivars are grown for their magnificent, lustrous evergreen foliage accompanied by brilliant-colored berries which tend to persist until spring. As the sexes are on separate plants, the female plant bearing the fruit, it is advisable to grow both male and female plants to ensure bountiful fruit production. Tolerant of considerable shade, grow these handsome evergreens in humus-rich soils. This year's growing conditions have produced incredible displays of berries indicating that plentiful moisture is a key factor in fruit production.

The members of the blue holly family (I. meservaeae) are deservedly popular in the nursery trade. These dense, vigorous, evergreen shrubs create a stunning mass of spiny blue-green foliage on spreading, black-tinted branches which generate red or golden-yellow berries. Annual pruning may be required to maintain a compact specimen.

Ilex verticillata, commonly called winterberry, is a deciduous member of the holly family which displays spectacular clusters of red berries. A native to this area, large shrubs can be discovered in damp, swampy places, their large lustrous berries standing out for all to see once the foliage drops. Several cultivars are available including "Sparkleberry," which has small but abundant, brilliantly colored fruit; "Red Sprite," a charming dwarf; and "Jolly Red" with large, colorful berries. The fruited branches are lovely against a blanket of snow and sensational in holiday decorations. With the coming of spring, my berries quickly disappear, however, courtesy of my returning bluebirds who spend days devouring the ripened fruits.

Ordelheide leaves Cohasset Revitalization Corporation

Cites opposition from townspeople

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In a big blow to the ongoing downtown and harbor area revitalization effort, the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation announced the resignation of board member Gerd Ordelheide.

Ordelheide, the owner of the Red Lion Inn and one of the prime backers of the CRC, along with Atlantica and Kimballs By the Sea owner Peter Roy, left the organization saying he was unhappy with both the town's response to the non-profit group, and the corporate structure of the CRC.

"There hasn't been enough town support," he said this week. "All the townspeople must want what I give my money to, otherwise I'm not interested." He also said he was uncomfortable with the revitalization effort being led by a private group, not the town. "I just want to fix the street lamps, fix the sidewalks, make the gas station put a proper railing in, plant some trees. We don't need an organization to do it."

"What we need is the whole town involved, not the rich people, and that is how it is perceived."
— Gerd Ordelheide, Red Lion Inn

Ordelheide has always shied away from backing "revitalization" of the village area, where the Red Lion Inn has sat since 1704. He instead prefers to say his interest lies in "sprucing up" downtown Cohasset.

"My intent was never to have a Nantucket here. I like the town like this," he said. "The downtown needs some sprucing up. There are lamps broken."

Despite his intentions, the CRC and revitalization effort has come under fire for allegedly serving as a vehicle to advance Roy and Ordelheide's business interests, attract tourists, and change the character of the town. A recent petition signed by 112 Cohasset residents accused the CRC of setting the "agenda and vision" for Cohasset, rather than the town's elected officials.

Oddly, that was one of the points that drove Ordelheide to abandon his involvement with the CRC.

"My belief from the beginning was that the manager of the corpora-

Train deal near

Residents to see agreement before it's inked

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

There will be bells, but no whistles. There will be bridges, but no tunnels.

Those are some of what is in store for Cohasset when it signs a mitigation agreement with the MBTA concerning Greenbush. The MBTA hoped that would've happened Tuesday night, but selectmen balked, saying they remained concerned with some of the agreement's language and issues revolving around the town-owned right-of-way. They also said they refused to sign anything without it being circulated among town residents first.

Though they declined to sign the agreement, which the MBTA hand-delivered to each of the selectmen's homes Saturday, a deal remains possible within the next month.

"In reviewing it, there are still some issues we wish to discuss

The darkest side of homelessness

Paul Tyler and his wife survive life out on the streets of Boston

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Babies sleeping in makeshift cribs made out of small cardboard boxes.

Teenage girls being recruited on a daily basis by pimps to become prostitutes.

People being shot. Or freezing to death.

Those are just a few of the everyday sights Paul Tyler saw when he and his wife were homeless, living in Boston Common for four months.

"I've seen a lot of bad things," Tyler said. "Some of them were really sickening."

Tyler, 34, has been homeless for about two years. For the past four months, Tyler has been living at Father Bill's Place, a homeless shelter in Quincy.

But although Tyler is happy he and his wife are not stuck out on Boston Common anymore, he said he feels alone — his wife currently resides with her aunt in Winthrop along with their three children. In addition, Tyler has another son living with his ex-wife, and his current wife has another daughter who lives elsewhere.

Tyler said it's not that he isn't yearning to be with his wife and his children right now, but rather, he feels he needs to clean his life up first.

"I've had a lot of problems with drugs in the past," he said. "But since I came to Father Bill's, I've been clean and sober. I miss my family though — I have photos of them that I look at all the time."

Tyler said these days he thinks about the past years of his life at great length.

"I wish I never got into the things I got into," he said. "But I know I can't dwell on the past. I can only fix the future. Right now, I have things to be proud of and things to look forward to. I can't erase the fact that I wasn't much of a caring person in the past."

Tyler's story started about two years ago when he, his wife, and their children moved in with Tyler's father in Cambridge during May of 1998.

Eventually, Tyler's father decided to retire from his job and move

Cohasset schools hope for 9.8 percent budget hike

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

In a best case scenario, the school department budget will grow by more than $940,000, and add six new teachers in Cohasset classrooms.

Last Thursday's school committee meeting, as Chairman Pat Martin said, "officially opened budget season time," and featured the town's three principals making their cases.

"If they get everything they ask for, the budget will increase near 10 percent," she said.

Last year's budget punched in at $9,575,564, including the $292,000 supplementary budget approved at the October special Town Meeting, and $32,009 received from an insurance settlement. Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey told the committee that if none of the principals' requests were approved and the town level-funded the budget with just the needed salary increases included, it would increase by $313,250, to $9,888,814 — a 3.27 percent increase.

But if the committee approves the budgets as submitted, the budget would increase to $10,516,107.

New director takes over reins of special education

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

It's been quite a busy first few months for Steven Kaplan, the new director of special services in Cohasset schools.

First, he was hired just weeks before the new school year started to oversee a department in limbo, between unsure state funding for special education [SPED] programs, and a change in the state standards for SPED students.. And then his secretary got sick, leaving him short-handed while trying to catch up and still oversee the school district's counseling program, nursing services, METCO program, and Americans with Disabilities Act enforcement and implementation in the schools. That's not to mention the arrangement of special education programs for 260 Cohasset schoolchildren.

"I've been playing catch-up," Kaplan said last week in his office at the middle/high school, after finally getting a chance to sit down. "I had no transition time. I had everything dropped in my lap."

Vets memorial seeks donations

The project to update the World War II veterans memorial overlooking Cohasset Harbor is in its final stages, and Cohasset Military Memorial head Austin Ahern is already seeking donations for the WWI and Spanish-American War memorials.

The project to honor Cohasset's veterans stalled more than seven years ago when a battle broke out over who was eligible to be on the memorial. Though the military aspect of the war ended with V-J day on August 14, 1945, Congress did not end the state of war until Dec. 31, 1946. Congress recognizes servicemen on duty during that occupational time as veterans, but their names were not included on the Cohasset memorial.

Ahern agreed to add the names in 1995, but no work had been until this past June when selectmen threatened to take over the project. Since then, with the help of selectman Merle Brown, a list of missing names has been collected and given to Ahern, who said he is currently shopping for the granite in Vermont to etch the names.

Brown said the town backed off from its threats to take over, and said the World War II memorial will be finished before any other project is started.

But others are frustrated at the slow pace. "It's been a very frustrating five-plus years," said retired Army Lt. Col. Joseph McElroy. He complained that the new money solicitation was inappropriate with the project still unfinished.

Ahern said he has about $20,000 collected for the memorials, and expects it to cost close to $50,000 to finish the other two.

Ribbon cutting for new water tank

A ribbon-cutting ceremony will be held by the Water Commission Saturday, Dec. 16, at 10 a.m. to turn on the new Scituate Hill water storage tank.

The new tank is located at the former Norfolk Conveyer site at 155 King St. off Route 3A. A reception will be held at the Water Treatment Plant at 339 King St. following the ceremony.

Water Commissioner Chairman John McNabb said, "The completion of this tank, at a cost of about $1,600,000 is the most significant new construction in the Cohasset water system since the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant was constructed in 1978.

"This new tank is completed," said McNabb, "and is ready to be turned on. This new tank will provide a significant benefit to our water consumers, since in addition to providing essential fire fighting water reserve for the town, the new tank will allow us to clean out and repaint the Bear Hill tank and then to flush the water distribution—improving the taste and odor of the water for all of our customers.

"The year 2000 has also been one of our busiest construction years ever," he said, "since in addition to the new tank, our completed Year 2000 projects included:

- replacing pipes on King Street, Schofield Road, Lily Pond Lane, Black Horse Lane, Holly Lane, Stevens Lane, Highland Court, Robert Jason Road and Highland Avenue.
- beginning to reactivate the Ellms Meadow well fields;
- updating our long-range distribution system capital improvements plan;
- developing a long-range capital improvements plan for the treatment plant;
- beginning to develop a long-range water supply protection plan; and
- many repairs to the treatment plant.

Ambulance rates go up

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Emergency care in Cohasset just got more expensive.

Because of rising costs and the switch from basic EMT to paramedic service, selectmen approved an across the board price increase of all services provided by the town's ambulance.

This fall, Cohasset won approval to provide Advanced Life Support (ALS) service, where previously the town had been restricted to Basic Life Support (BLS). State requirements normally call for eight paramedics to be on staff for a town to offer ALS service. Cohasset currently has just six. But the state granted the town a waiver, providing it hires two more paramedics within the next couple of years.

With ALS service now offered, town paramedics can administer IV's and other drugs to patients who need them. Cohasset paramedics no longer have to meet up with a paramedic unit dispatched from South Shore Hospital to transfer patients, although paramedic service from the hospital is still an option.

Town Treasurer Joseph DiVito said there were two reasons for the rate increase. "The town raised rates in accordance with Medicare for the cost of providing the service," he said. "Our costs go up and Medicare recognizes it." Therefore, people covered by Medicare won't be affected by the increase.

Increased costs included oxygen, up $1.28 to $42.14, cardiac monitoring, up 68 cents to $124.63, and defibrillation, up $1.77 to $90.29.

But the major increase came from establishing rates, where there previously weren't any.

"We never had an ALS rate, so we adopted one," explained Town Manager Mark Haddad. The new ALS rate will be $300.99 "if a paramedic is used" he said. If basic ambulance transport is needed, the cost will be $228.75, an increase of $6.93.

The town also adopted a charge rate, $90.29, for instances where IV and drug therapy occurs.

DiVito said the increases didn't come as a surprise to the town. "It was all part of the plan when the town hired six new paramedics last year," he said. "It was discussed at the selectmen's meeting that this was anticipated."

The paramedics were hired as firefighters retired or left the town department. But because of the advanced training paramedics have, an additional $100,000 was needed to cover salary increases.

But Haddad said the increases aren't frivolous. "South Shore Hospital charges these rates," he said, "but now our own paramedics get it." He also said most charges are covered by insurance.

"We're now providing paramedic care and we have to charge accordingly," said DiVito. "We're going to see periodic rate increase with fees as costs go up and Medicare adopts higher rates."

Vacancies

Selectmen announced Tuesday night the resignation of Valerie Semensi from the conservation commission. As a result, anyone interested in filling the spot, or one of the two associate member positions, should contact the Town Clerk's office.

Selectman Merle Brown also reported that three vacancies exist on the historical commission.

Mercury thermometers

Responding to a petition sent to the board last week, selectmen voted to place an article on the annual town meeting agenda that would ban the sale of mercury thermometers in Cohasset. The petition, pushed by water commissioner John McNabb, came after the City of Boston passed a similar ban last month.

Winter DPW guidelines listed

The D.P.W. has issued the following winter guidelines:

1. Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15.
2. Do not plow or shovel snow, water or any other debris from private property onto roadways or sidewalks.
3. Uncover storm drains when possible.
4. Sand for resident use only will be available behind the former highway garage at 55R South Main St.
5. The town is not responsible for damaged lawns, fences, steps, shrubs, trees or mail boxes within the town layout.

Time for walk-ins

Selectmen set aside 10 minutes early in their meetings, usually at 7:40 p.m., to address any concerns from members of the public who have issues that are not on the agenda.

If the matter cannot be handled briefly, it will be placed on a future agenda. Call Town Manager Mark Haddad at 383-4105 for more information. Selectmen's meetings start at 7:30 p.m. The next selectmen's meeting is slated for Dec. 19.

2 a.m. opening

Selectmen, acting as the town licensing board, voted to allow businesses to stay open until 2 a.m. New Year's Day. The vote came after a number of businesses asked Town Manager Mark Haddad to do so. Selectman Michael Sullivan asked businesses to be extra vigilant that night for inebriated customers attempting to drive home.

Liquor license violators warned

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Two local businesses pled their case before the town's licensing authority, also known as the Board of Selectmen, after being accused of violating their liquor licenses.

"We were just stupid," said Sheila O'Neil, co-owner of Bernard's Restaurant on Ripley Road. "I claim stupidity." O'Neil, her husband Bernard, and some friends were caught drinking at the restaurant Nov. 19, 47 minutes after their license expired at 1 a.m.

Detective Gregory Lennon found the violation after driving by the restaurant and seeing "numerous patrons" still inside drinking, according to his police report. The liquor license also was not posted in the bar area.

At the hearing, Sheila O'Neil told selectmen that she didn't think the license applied to private parties, in this case, her and some friends.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said he believed the violation "wasn't intentional," but said the board would have to act in order to remain consistent. The O'Neils were given a warning and instructed to post the license immediately.

Robert Pike, manager of Cohasset Plaza Liquors, said the store fell victim to a fake ID, when it sold alcohol to 19-year old Joseph Douglas, of Scituate, on Nov. 18. Douglas was pulled over by Cohasset Police for a traffic violation, and was found with a 12-pack of Budweiser and bottle of Bacardi Rum. Pike and night manager Michael Thompson contended that they had checked Douglas' ID on a couple prior occasions, and had glanced at it that night he was arrested.

However when Douglas was arrested, no fake ID was found. Arresting officer Jeffrey Treanor said the only ID Douglas produced was a bent Massachusetts ID, and high school ID card.

"He was arrested outside the property," said Pike. "We had deemed him to be of age two prior times."

Pike also said he and Thompson were both TIPS certified, and called Thompson his "best employee."

"That's why I have him on Saturday night, because of his thoroughness," he told selectmen.

Mark Haddad suggested that Douglas could have had a fake second Mass. ID, and thrown it out the window, or hid the fake in the car when pulled over.

The board recommended no action be taken, but gave a letter of warning and said they would monitor the situation.

Afterwards Pike said the store was considering getting an ID scanner that would prevent ID tampering.

Selectmen to review license conditions

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen will be looking to bring a bit of uniformity to the town's license conditions when it begins the annual review process for the 51 common victualler, alcohol, and entertainment licenses in Cohasset.

The hearing will be held as part of the Dec. 19 selectman's meeting at Town Hall.

"It's to take away the argument we hear from time to time 'why are you subjecting me to this,'" said Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan. "I think we heard some of that during the Red Lion Inn hearings to a certain extent."

The Red Lion Inn has nearly two pages of conditions attached to its licenses, including things such as noise and hours restrictions, which vary in different parts of the complex.

"It's apparent that it's time to impose similar conditions on all licenses," said selectmen Ronnie McMorris.

If approved, license holders would have to follow conditions affecting the hours of operation, seating capacity, trash, snow and ice removal, noise, parking, deliveries and outdoor food service.

A sample list of conditions being looked over by town counsel include:

- sidewalks and other areas abutting the business must be kept clean of trash and litter at all times
- snow and ice must be removed from sidewalks and other access areas
- trash and refuse must be kept inside until removed, unless the business has an approved outdoor container
- deliveries, trash pickup and service have to be scheduled to prevent noise and traffic problems
- business must be conducted in a way that traffic, parking, litter, public intoxication, and noise problems aren't exacerbated.

The big issues, especially to Callahan and McMorris, are the noise, litter, and snow and ice removal conditions.

"The trash condition is an answer to the problem we've had in the village," Callahan explained. "We received a lot of citizen complaints about trash barrels overflowing." He said it didn't make financial sense for the town to pay for overtime to clean trash from the village, and instead wants "more policing by businesses themselves."

McMorris said the trash and snow and ice conditions were "reasonable conditions" to put on the licenses.

"They should monitor what goes on outside on the sidewalks," she said. "It's about safety and general cleanliness."

The noise condition came after citizens banded together to propose restrictions on a new nightclub in the renovated Red Lion Inn. Selectmen believe since the Red Lion Inn is restricted, so should all the other businesses. "It's the City of Boston noise standard," Callahan explained. Boston prohibits noise from a bar, night club, or other entertainment venue from being audible in the street or adjoining property.

Selectmen, MBTA close to Greenbush train pact

further," Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan told those in attendance Tuesday. "There was a certain push to sign it quickly, but there are still some issues we're going to deal with over the next couple of weeks."

Callahan and Town Manager Mark Haddad said the hold-up revolved around a deal that would turnover the town-owned section of the Greenbush right-of-way to the state, but wasn't able to comment further.

"Some of the specifics are still subject to executive session," Callahan said.

Haddad added the disagreement involved "what the T wants in return."

The town purchased the right-of-way in 1982 for $132,000. The town recently hired surveyors to assess the value of the land strip that cuts right through the middle of town, but Haddad wasn't able to comment on its value.

Selectman Michael Sullivan also said there were some concerns over "verbiage" in the agreement.

The board was very complimentary of the MBTA and state Department of Transportation – a significant change from its feelings this summer.

"Discussions have been going on for four years, and have been frustrating for three and a half," said Callahan. "But talks have picked up considerably in the past three months."

The turning point appears to be the September meeting between the Greenbush towns, Governor Paul Cellucci, Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan, and Department of Environmental Protection head Robert Durand. At the meeting, Cellucci reaffirmed his pledge to bring back the controversial third leg of the Old Colony commuter rail lines, but ordered Sullivan and Durand to settle the various towns' mitigation issues within 90 days.

In that time, Haddad and Cohasset Mitigation Committee Chairman Thomas Gruber have met regularly with MBTA representative Kevin Dasey, Eric Fleming of Sverdrup, the project's engineers, and MBTA lawyers, to hammer out an agreement. Callahan said Kevin Sullivan has been "kept abreast" of the negotiations, and even participated in one of them.

Selectmen Fred Koed said there "was no major disagreement" among the board about the proposed agreement.

Callahan said the board was not splitting down anti and pro Greenbush lines. "We have to protect the town as if it is coming," he said.

The decision to not sign took the secretary's office by surprise. "We had conversations with both the Cohasset Town Manager and lawyers for the town, and they gave us every indication the package was an acceptable one. So we were a little surprised it was not signed," said John Carlisle, the spokesman for Sullivan's office. "We've dealt with them in a good faith manner, listened to their concerns, had a good dialogue, a constructive dialogue, and we hope to get it signed as soon as possible."

Though Carlisle said the state would continue to negotiate with the town, he was doubtful about how much more the state could offer. "We've made a very generous offer," he said. "It would be very difficult to go any further."

The agreement would not cover environmental impacts and concerns, Callahan said. A separate Environmental Impact Report will be dealt with by the town's conservation commission. "The MBTA learned from past experience [reopening the line to Plymouth and Middleboro]," he explained. "It would go to the town's conservation commission, then the DEP and would get hammered along the way. Now they're going for the waiver from DEP first and then go to the local conservation commission, handing them an agreement and saying 'Here, sign this.'"

Callahan said though he didn't agree with the MBTA's tactics, he has reviewed the agreement, and as a former conservation commission chairman, said "I don't have a huge problem with it."

A highlight from the agreement, which still has to be approved by the town's conservation commission, is that all wetlands destroyed by the project will be replicated in town. The MBTA had said earlier that it might replicate the wetlands elsewhere.

One big coup for the town was a pledge by the MBTA for a no-whistle policy on the train, except in the case of an emergency, and bells and overhead cantilever warning lights at each of the town's six grade crossings. The MBTA has balked at committing to four-quadrant gates, as they have not yet been mandated by the federal government. But the board said its safety concerns have been remedied overall.

Perhaps the biggest effect will be felt on private way residents. Rocky Lane residents will see their road closed and replaced with a bridge over the tracks. Sestito Lane and Castle Road will also be closed and replaced with one road.

Spring Street will turn into a dead-end, with a walking path providing access to South Main Street. Local traffic will be routed through the Pleasant and Pond Street intersection, which will undergo a facelift. Callahan said the MBTA appears willing to blast out the massive boulder at the intersection, eliminating the bend.

The MBTA also committed to providing proper noise and vibration mitigation to homes and businesses within a certain distance of the tracks. Callahan said the MBTA will meet with property owners separately, and will also provide a liaison between property owners, the town and themselves.

Haddad said the town planning and design review boards will be able to look over design plans for the Cohasset station when the project is between 60 and 90 percent completed.

One other sticking point is the historic preservation fund, which is tied to the sale of the right-of-way. The MBTA had originally offered a $100,000 fund in May, but the town, at the time, was looking for $2.1 million. Callahan said though there aren't many historic structures that will be affected by the train, "we have historic aspects that need protection."

Selectmen said once an agreement is reached, there will be a public hearing to discuss the agreement, possibly in January.

If Cohasset signs the agreement, it will be just the second Greenbush town to do so. Hingham signed a controversial deal last spring that calls for the construction of a $40 million tunnel under Hingham Square, which will run right behind the Hingham Journal building, and a $1.35 million historic preservation trust fund.

AROUND TOWN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

SLOW DOWN

Hello Cohasset! Well, I guess I got my snow...as little as it was. For all of you who were able to enjoy it, I hope that you had a great time. We sure did!

One of the things that I noticed with myself as well as others, was the need to SLOW DOWN when driving and really be aware of the road conditions and other drivers. It is so easy to forget that and that is when the accidents start happening.

TOYS FOR TOTS

I received an email from a local business here in town, who are participating in a great program to benefit needy children. Pastimes is currently holding a Toys For Tots promotion and the response has been wonderful! Any toy that is purchased for the drive, will be discounted 50 percent as long as it is dropped in the bin at the store. So far, they have filled two buckets and will continue the drive through Christmas.

They have had stuffed animals, Beanie Babies and Pokemon items and even had three scooters donated this past weekend. All items are welcome from outside the store as well, particularly boy items such as, trucks, cars or other gender neutral items like Lincoln Logs and digital games. These items can be brought right to the store or dropped off at the Cohasset Police Station. This is a great way to show the "giving" spirit at Christmas for everyone involved.

GIVING TREE

Another great holiday project going on in town is the "Appalachia Giving Tree." During past holiday seasons, you have probably heard of the Charlie Brown Christmas tree, the famous Rockefeller Center holiday tree and even that infamous tree precariously tied to the back of the Grinch's sleigh. Well, The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project announces the Appalachia Giving Tree! While the tree itself is artificial, nothing else about it or the project is. By the end of December, the tree will have traveled between four places of worship in Cohasset to bring the message of Appalachia closer to home during this time of reflection and to raise money for the ecumenical ASP groups 14th pilgrimage to Appalachia in June of 2001.

The Tree began its journey at the Second Congregational Church during the first week of December. For a minimum donation of $5.00, people purchased a red ribbon with their name of a loved one written on it to tie onto the tree. In addition, they received a special holiday ornament to place on their tree or hang in their home during the winter season, as a reminder of those less fortunate. The ornaments have been cut by teenage volunteers from asphalt shingles and plywood; symbols for them of the many building projects completed over the years. On Sunday, Dec. 10, the tree was placed in the hall of St. Stephens Episcopal Church, will travel to First Parish on Sunday, Dec. 17 and end at St. Anthony's Catholic Church on Sunday, Dec. 24. The Cohasset Appalachia Service is a group of more than 150 volunteers who prepare all year for an annual journey to the Appalachia Region of the US, to assist in the Appalachia Service Project, Inc, a national home repair ministry. The volunteer group has been led by the Rev. Gary Ritts of the Second Congregational Church, and his wife Judy for 14 years. Its mission is to provide warmer, drier and safer housing for our neighbors in Appalachia. Aside from fundraising, preparations include ten months of studying the region, seminars preparing volunteers for immersion in a different culture and environment, construction workshops and mandatory hours of community service in their own town. Many fundraisers throughout the year, help to pay for the necessary tools and project needs.

This year, the group decided to eliminate the annual Thanksgiving Pie and Super Bowl sandwich fundraiser and bring the meaning of Appalachia while raising needed funds through the Giving Tree Project. What a great project to be involved with.

HOCKEY BOOSTERS

All hockey players grab your sticks! The Cohasset Hockey Boosters are pleased to announce that the Second Annual Alumni Hockey Game will be held on Monday, January 1 at Pilgrim Arena in Hingham. Two games are scheduled: the first at 12:20 pm and the second at 1:30 pm. Check-In for both games will begin at 11:45. Mailings have been sent to alumni players with detailed information about the event. Any alumni skater who has not received a registration form and who would like to skate, should contact either Jo-Ann Pilczak at 383-0268 or Ann Rasmussen at 383-1907. The registration fee is $20.00 per skater and includes at least one game and a souvenir shirt. Light refreshments will be available to all players. As was the case last year, an anonymous Alumnus has offered to pay the $20 registration fee for any skater who is currently a college student! Last year's Alumni Game was a great success with over 50 alumni and current varsity team skaters and approximately 300 spectators. Come join the fun for a few hours on New Year's Day. Spectator admission is $5.00 for adults, $3.00 for children under 12. A raffle will be held during the game. This year's game will be dedicated in memory of Clark Chatterton. What a great way to start of the New Year!

Famous rocker makes a Cohasset stop

By Mary Ford

Corky Laing, left, the drummer for the 70s rock group Mountain, and Cohasset's Howie Altholtz talk about Laing's new CD at French Memories.

It was business as usual at French Memories on Saturday morning.

Few of the dozens of local residents who came in for croissants and coffee noticed the animated, middle-aged rocker sitting near the window reminiscing about the '70s with a friend.

Several patrons stopped by to say hello to Howie Altholtz of Summer Street, a music lawyer representing his client and friend, Corky Laing, who sat at the table with him. They knew Altholtz either as a neighbor, through the schools or as an activist who helped lobby for aesthetically pleasing improvements to the exterior of the new sewer treatment plant in the marsh off Elm Street.

Hard rock fans will recognize Laing's name. Laing, the drummer for the '70s group Mountain ("Missippi Queen" and "Nantucket Sleighride"), is releasing a new CD under the band name Cork with Eric Schencken of Spin Doctors fame and Noel Redding, who performed on bass with the late Jimi Hendrix.

Although Altholtz, who recently left the law firm Nixon Peabody to venture out on his own, and Laing have only known each other for about 18 months, the two not only share a client-lawyer relationship but a love for rock and roll.

For Altholtz, who plays the guitar and performed at Woodstock for 12 years, the law and music industry are a natural mix.

And for unassuming Laing — who at 52 is as enthusiastic about rock music as any teenager — talking about the record industry is a joy.

Laing, who has traded his wavy, '70s long locks for a shorter, shaggier haircut, lives in Toronto with his wife and 13-year-old son. Although he and Altholtz are comfortable in their establishment roles — the memories of the rebellious rocking '70s still resonate.

Most of Laing's fans are well beyond their youth, so the musician laughs when he says his son describes him as "a cool dad."

In addition to his lawyer duties, Altholtz is also part of a new venture on the Internet — dotclick.com — that will help fans find out more about the artists they like and also will help the artists understand more about their fans.

The men both joked about how the cutting-edge software will help archaic rock and roll enter the 21st century.

Give CRC a chance

In the early 1990s, Cohasset Village was a different place. With a faltering economy, the loss of Cohasset Pharmacy, Cohasset Savings Bank and a viable Red Lion Inn — "beleaguered" is the adjective that comes to mind to describe the village.

About five years ago, a group of concerned village shop owners and business people met at French Memories with Dean Rizzo who led a brainstorming discussion on what could be done to bring new life to the area.

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation is really an outgrowth of that early effort whose predecessor was the Village Renaissance Committee a group that took small steps to beautify the village. Remember when the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce hosted a village "charette" a two-day event during which interested citizens tried to envision village improvements? Much of what came out of the charette is very similar to what the CRC is floating today.

Those efforts eventually led to the Village Revitalization Task Force, a town committee.

But the lofty goals of all those efforts were like "pie in the sky" until the CRC came along with some cash and organization to give the village project some real momentum.

Sadly, the motives of the CRC are perceived by some to be solely the self-serving efforts of two mega-rich businessmen with nothing but their own personal benefit at heart.

We highly doubt that. Neither Peter Roy nor Gerd Ordelheide need the recognition or the aggravation. In fact, citing community opposition, Mr. Ordelheide announced this week that he has decided to resign from the CRC.

We don't believe for a minute that CRC or its backers want to turn Cohasset into a tourist trap. All of us should want the Red Lion Inn, Atlantica and other local businesses to succeed. It's better for the tax rate and more aesthetically pleasing than boarded up, dilapidated buildings.

Even "minor" village improvements such as installing well-delineated sidewalks are going to cost millions of dollars. Without the type of public-private partnership that CRC offers, we doubt we'll ever see any real infrastructure improvements.

CRC with town oversight can work. On a smaller scale, look at how successful the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation has been in first the renovation and now oversight of the operation of the Lightkeepers Residence that includes Bancroft Hall. Don't you remember when the Lightkeepers Residence was an eyesore and Beacon Rock behind it was nothing but a teen drinking hangout?

We're saddened that Mr. Ordelheide has resigned from the CRC. Now is the time for citizens who think CRC can be the catalyst to make positive, small-scale changes downtown to speak up. If you don't, we think in a few months you can kiss the opportunity for village improvements goodbye.

Continuing to question CRC

TO THE EDITOR:

For more than two months those of us in the town of Cohasset who dare question CRC and Messrs. Roy and Ordelheide's altruism have been most roundly, indeed, most vociferously and soundly, castigated by a select few of Cohasset's better and more adept protectors. We are accused of 'snide innuendo', 'naysaying', our 'accuser's eyes seem to be growing closer together'[the meaning of which continues to elude us]. We are guilty of 'destructive carping', 'provincialism'; we are 'witless', 'mean-spirited', 'shamefully scurrilous and narrow minded'; guilty of 'petty shortsightedness, 'meaningless babble', and called that name that sends shivers of aversion through us: 'elitist.'

We are censured as 'short sighted', judged 'negative', convicted of 'juvenile braying', and have had the epithet 'stable of individuals whose naysaying is predictable' thrown at us. Surely tell me this is not the dreaded stable anatomy analogy.

Of course those who do not question are 'sophisticates',' kindlier', and 'realistic'. There are calls for constructive and practical input, but when that input is given, it is called a 'mantra that's buzzing around, repeated ad nauseam' and then directed to'stop carping'.

We are constantly told that this largesse is just that: largesse. We are instructed to accept the bounty for we must not 'kill off the one organization that has the potential to preserve and enhance that [historic] legacy.'

Pardon me, but we must continue to question, to challenge. Those projects listed as being accomplished by the private citizen — churches, playing fields, library, Community Center and the others — were most beneficial to the entire town; they provided important involvement for the entire town, enjoyment for the town. Their primary purpose was not to benefit a select few. There are those of us who continue and will continue to champion helping our town residents. Mayhaps CRC et al will stop 'carping' and do likewise.

Thanks for support

TO THE EDITOR

After a long campaign season and some much needed time off with my family, I wanted to take this opportunity to thank to all of the Cohasset voters who supported my campaign for State Representative.

This race focused on the issues that are important to our families and to our community. For that, I thank my opponents who brought great concern and passion to these issues, as well as all of the people who participated in public forums and meetings. I would also like to thank the voters who took the time to discuss these issues with me on their doorsteps. I was a better candidate and will be a better State Representative because you took the time to share your perspective on the issues with me. As one voter told me, "...we may not always agree, but I appreciate you taking the time to listen to all sides of the issue." That is a promise that I will continue to uphold as your State Representative. I will always work hard to achieve the best results for our community.

Thank you again and I hope you are all able to enjoy the holiday season with friends and family. If I can be of any assistance with a community or legislative matter, residents can email me at g-bradley@worldnet or telephone me at my home at 740-3127. I look forward to representing our community at the State House.

Garrett Bradley
State Representative -Elect

Silent majority

TO THE EDITOR

A mean-spirited petition signed, by over 100 Cohasset residents, cast aspersions on the motivation of the backers of the non-profit Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, and proposed dumping the responsibility on the Board of Selectmen. The real intent, of course, was to ensure that nothing much would happen. The idea of preservation through revitalization was not grasped; perhaps clear thinking was inhibited by irrational fear of "change" (and by concern that it might cost them something).

One of the principal backers has withdrawn his support, so perhaps the petition and the nastiness of the comments expressed by too many townspeople is achieving the desired destructive effect.

The town has been blessed in the past by the generosity of certain affluent residents. Some among us have the good sense to recognize and appreciate it. What doesn't make sense is the counter-productive insults directed at their replacements.

Unfortunately, the many people that are appalled by the shortsightedness of the loud-mouthed opposition have not been equally vocal. I'm not suggesting a (shudder) hand count, but I think the quiet supporters outnumber the naysayers, both the ones that go public and those who privately recirculate the negative gossip.

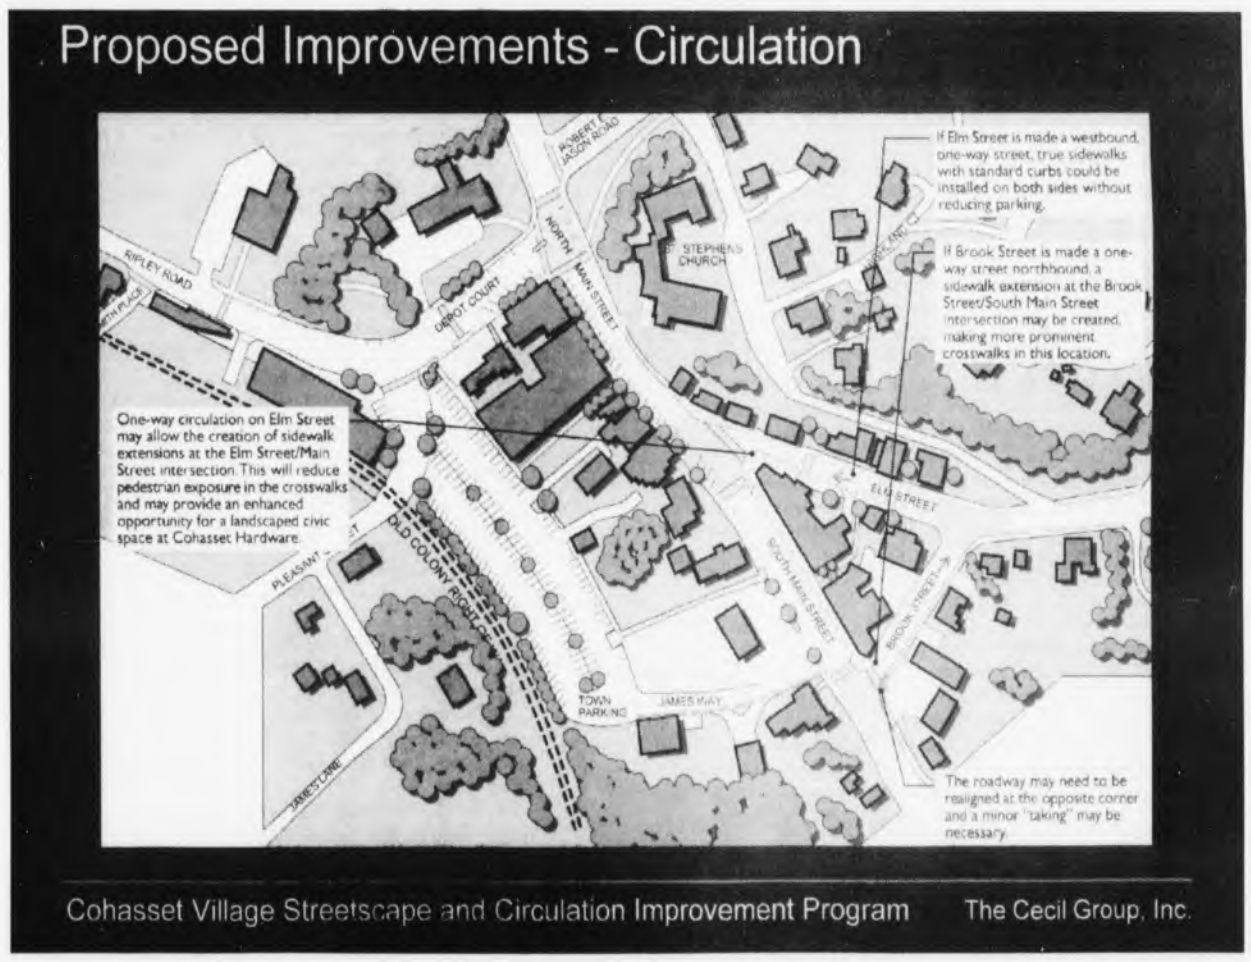
Community input sought on village plans

The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation, in partnership with the town Village Revitalization Task Force, seeks community input in the effort to develop designs for infrastructure, circulation and streetscape improvements in Cohasset Village. The Cecil Group, an urban landscape design firm, has been retained to help the community develop design alternatives for new sidewalks, better parking, improved vehicle and pedestrian access, decorative lighting, additional plantings and street furniture. The intent is not to change the character and charm of the village, but to improve the existing infrastructure in a manner that creates a safer environment for pedestrians, bicyclists and vehicles, as well as preserves the historic nature of the village, CRC director Dean Rizzo said.

The ideas presented in these plans were developed from public input, and the experiences of the Cecil Group. These drawings are meant to generate ideas and not to convey a definitive proposal, Rizzo said. A workshop will be scheduled for January to present a revised set of design ideas. Plans are available for review at the CRC office, 87 Elm St. Hours are10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday, Wednesday and Friday; and from noon to 8 p.m., Tuesday.



In praise of Nebraska

I knew a girl from Nebraska whose chief claim to fame was that she once interviewed the woman who played the piano at Calamity Jane's funeral.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

She also thought of Chicago as "back east."

That's what Bill Clinton was up against last week when he visited Nebraska, the only state he missed while president, just so he could say he had done everything while he was in the Oval Office, if you'll pardon the expression.

Bill had never been to Nebraska before since it had not voted Democratic in a presidential election since 1964,and he probably figured there was no sense in waking up both Democratic voters at once just to shake hands and say "Hello."

It's the only state in which folks boast of a "Clinton-free zone," and is proud to point out the fact that only 38 per cent of its voters were hoodwinked into voting for Bill instead of Bob Dole in the 1996 election. This, of course, was before Bob went on the Viagra kick.

Nevertheless, the state did have a Democratic governor who is now a senator, Bob Kerrey, who, it is said, once had an affair with movie actress Debra Winger while in the governor's mansion, so the kinship with the president is obvious.

I first heard of Nebraska shortly after the glacier retreated, revealing a semi-pro football team that was looking for a place to play. So the local farmers, with time on their hands until the corn crop came in, hired the team for the state university.

"Cornhuskers," they called them, although not many of them did. The team did so well there for a while that when the coach, Tom Osborne, retired, the grateful farmers, their corn crops safely stored away in government silos, got together in sufficient numbers to send him to Congress. He's a Republican, of course.

Contrary to a widely held belief, the state is not named after the football team. It's an Omaha Indian word for "flat river," which could apply to the whole landscape. What else can you say about a state whose highest point is a cow pasture in Johnson township?

Nebraska is so flat that the whole state is thought of by the airline industry as an emergency landing field for flights between Chicago and San Francisco. Or between the metropolises of Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Cheyenne, Wyo.

The city manager of Sidney, Neb., (pop. 5,959) used to gather town officials together once a year and fly to Denver en masse to create the illusion that there was enough paying traffic for Ozark Airlines so that they would keep the city on as a regularly scheduled stop.

The most famous Nebraskan of them all — outside of football coaches, that is — was William Jennings Bryan, the only candidate of a major party to run for president three times and lose. It's also the birthplace of Gerald Ford, the only president who was appointed, rather than elected.

On second thought, after the events of the past month in Florida, that may not be such a bad idea.

Keep an open mind

TO THE EDITOR:

In the Paul Pratt Library and conservation office at Town Hall there is a report — "Town of Cohasset Open Space and Recreation Plan — 1997-2001."

This plan was mandated by the state in order that towns may receive funds for purchasing open spaces and is to be updated every five years. In an effort to update this report a survey was sent out all residents earlier this year and it is now being evaluated by the Open Space Committee.

In the report of 1997-2001 in Section 7, there are three subsections: A. Summary of Resource Protection Needs; B. Summary of Community's Needs; and C. Management Needs and Potential Changes of Use.

A quote from the Report — C. Management Needs and Potential Changes — "Cohasset residents desire better maintenance of existing open space. The recent consolidation of several departments, including the tree, park and cemetery department and the highway department, into one department of public works to operate from a single facility should improve management and maintenance efficiency. Continued expansion and promotion of cleanup and adopt-a-park efforts by civic and youth organizations can also improve maintenance."

I urge residents to read this report and see how fellow residents feel about our town. In any case, in light of this section I think we should all keep a very open mind to the efforts of the Cohasset Revitalization Committee and listen to all the options they are presenting to the town.

The department of public works is doing a fine job. I am sure volunteer assistance would enhance many of their projects but there is just so much free time for volunteers such as Boy Scouts, garden clubs and others to give, as suggested in the 1997-2000 report.

We certainly can get used to looking at shabbiness and not see it after a while, both in our town and even in our homes! Remember that big event we all probably have had in our lives and how we hustled to "make things look good" when we realized just exactly what home and yard was looking like? Take a good look around town, both from a resident's point of view and a visitor's, be they family or friend. I'd say the Harbor area is getting to look mighty fine. Let's keep it up.

Steven Kaplan is the new director of special services in Cohasset schools.

But the change is a welcome one for Kaplan, who left a position as director of special education with the Edison School Project, a for-profit charter school company, that oversees 80 charter schools in 14 states. As the director for the nationwide project, Kaplan had to be both fluent in special education regulations across the country, as well as travel up to five days a week. "It became too much. I wanted to go back into administration," he said.

Kaplan, who holds a bachelor's degree in psychology from Fairleigh Dickinson University and a master's degree in psychology from the University of Rhode Island, started his career as a school psychologist. He came to Massachusetts in the late 1980's as the assistant director of student services with the Concord-Carlisle school district, and became active in state and national school psychologist associations. He was president of the Massachusetts association from 1994-1996, before starting his own private practice in 1997.

"School psychology and special education are very directly linked," he said of his career moves. "I've always had an interest in administration. I felt that is where the most effective change could come from."

About the time Kaplan was looking to get back into administration, the Cohasset position was advertised and he applied. An attraction for him was that the quality of the system wasn't at a lower level than the one he was leaving. "I wanted to find a school system that was on the same level [as the Edison schools], as far as the quality I wanted to be affiliated with," he explained. "A real selling point was my first meeting with [Superintendent Dr. Edward] Malvey. The very first interview here I felt very comfortable. I understood where he was coming from.

"I thought he would easy to work with, as he was committed to the special education program."

Much was made about the change in SPED eligibility standards — from "maximum feasible benefit" to "free and appropriate" — this past summer by the state legislature, with opponents claiming it would harm thousands of students across the commonwealth. Kaplan doesn't see it that way. He is familiar with the standards used in other states, and sees the move as Massachusetts becoming "more consistent with federal laws," which requires each individual case to be evaluated based on a set of criteria. "I don't see it being a major change for the system," Kaplan said. "Every child who needs special education or special services will get them."

He tends to think that the uproar over the change was much ado about nothing. "I think the reaction of certain advocacy groups was really unnecessary. I have traveled across the country and children receive services when they have those needs."

The one change the district might experience is more instances of children being pulled out of the classroom for implementation of services. "The previous director [Lynn Silva] made a strong attempt at full inclusion, and she should be commended," he said, adding, "but I believe in responsible inclusion, making sure if a student needs direct remediation, it's done in a direct manner.

"We should try to do as much as possible in-class, but I think we have to look at every case individually."

By providing more "direct intervention," Kaplan believes it would pay off in the end. "The more intense direct intervention they get while younger, it's not needed as much as they get older."

Some of the services provided by Kaplan and the department include, aiding medically-involved children with multiple handicaps, occupational therapy, physical therapy, adaptive physical education, and speech and language assistance.

"We have a full range of kids [in Cohasset public schools]," he said. "We have some very medically-involved children with multiple handicaps and some very bright kids with reading difficulties or in math. It's a typical school system with a full range of youngsters."

A major issue Kaplan is concerned about in general is the controversial MCAS exam, and the graduation requirement attached to it. He has attended conferences which gave some training in helping SPED students prepare for the exam, but he did so under a bit of duress. "Personally I'm opposed to high-stakes testing," he said. "It's driving education in the opposite direction of how we know youngsters learn. I don't think any one measure should be the deciding factor.

"The first thing you learn as a school psychologist is you don't make a clinical decision based on one test."

He was also concerned about what would happen to 18- or 19-year olds in urban areas who fail the test and can't graduate. Some critics say the state will see a massive jump in the school dropout rate. "I don't think [former state education czar Dr. John Silber, who helped create MCAS and the graduation policy] thought about that."

Kaplan is still evaluating the Cohasset school system, and though he hasn't yet been able to create a formal policy, he thinks based on his meetings with the interview committee, it will be consistent with the district's desires.

"They are genuinely committed to special education and needing someone to come in, look at very carefully what special education is in Cohasset, and make it the best possible," he said.

Health officials prepare for flu pandemic

By David Tibbetts
CORRESPONDENT

Flu season generally runs from December through March of every year.

This year, however, there is something else to be concerned about besides the normal flu season. World health officials are predicting that an influenza pandemic —essentially a worldwide flu epidemic — could hit the United States sometime this year or early next year.

The flu pandemic is problematic because it may introduce more virulent strains of influenza into the general population. A few years ago, an unusual avian strain of the flu swept through Hong Kong and killed dozens of people. Health officials aren't predicting a scenario like the one in Hong Kong, but they believe local officials should prepare emergency plans to cope with a pandemic outbreak.

State officials are already developing a plan to prepare for the outbreak of the flu pandemic. Locally, the health board is leading an initiative to use the flu pandemic as a springboard for updating the town's disaster plan, including preparations for other biological disasters and terrorism.

"During pandemics, the incidents of flu around the world are much greater than normal," said Health Agent Dr. Joseph Godzik. "In 1918, a pandemic claimed more than 100,000 lives in the United States alone. Today, the greatest risk is for people in poor physical shape. The best thing we can do is update our disaster plan to prepare for this event."

The health board sponsored a flu pandemic planning meeting on Nov. 15, but few people attended. Godzik said the health board is planning to hold another meeting in early January. He said it is important that local officials, including police, fire, medical and elder affairs representatives attend the meeting to help plan for the pandemic.

"We have to plan for the possibility that 50 percent of our police department or 75 percent of our fire department could be out sick at the same time after the pandemic arrives," Godzik said. "And it won't just be in Cohasset. The pandemic has the potential to affect things like emergency mutual aid systems. We need to meet with everyone involved in planning for these situations so we can develop and execute a plan."

Godzik said Cohasset has already conducted flu shot clinics. But because there isn't enough vaccine for every resident, officials limited most of the shots to senior citizens and people in poor health. One town clinic was held Dec. 9 for those over 50.

Depending on how much vaccine is available, the town might have to decide at some point whether to continue vaccinating senior citizens, or to first inoculate emergency workers.

"If the flu vaccine is in short supply, we have to decide whether to give shots to emergency workers who will be needed to care for people during the pandemic, or to senior citizens who are more vulnerable to the flu than younger people," Godzik said.

No one knows for certain when the pandemic will hit the United States. World health organizations that track flu outbreaks around the globe predict that a wide-scale pandemic could arrive in the United States soon, possibly within the next six months.

Cohasset schools hope for 9.8 percent budget hike

Cantelmo asked for a $271,640 increase from her FY-2001 budget. A good chunk of that increase would stem from personnel additions. She is asking for increased time for the school's music and art teachers, and office help, as well as a new third-grade teacher, custodian, reading teacher and vice-principal. She also asked for the reinstatement of the technology position.

She also asked the committee to increase her school's supply and textbook budget by $40,000 so it remains the same percentage of the budget as it was last year, 9 fi percent.

Cantelmo said the third-grade teacher is needed to keep class size within guideline standards. She expects 122 third-graders next year, with five teachers, meaning a 24-child average class size. With the addition of the sixth third-grade teacher, class size will be just 20 children per class. She also asked for a $4,000 increase in the library budget. "We have no money for books and software," she said. "A lot of it is donated by parents."

Her request for more time in music and art did receive some initial support from committee member Stephanie Noble. She said art and music have traditionally been the first thing cut in a tight budget. "It really has been taken a backseat to the other subjects," Noble said.

Paul Callahan greeted the school committee by saying, "This is a need budget, not a want budget. Everything here, the Deer Hill School needs."

Highlights of his budget included a $7,000 increase in the substitute teacher budget, $6,000 in extra-help for students preparing for the MCAS test, $12,000 to increase the amount of time the chorus instructor is at the Deer Hill, and a $14,000 increase in the school nurse's salary.

Callahan said the salary increase for the nurse would bring it up to the average salary level of nurses in the surrounding six towns.

He also adamantly insisted in a significant increase in supplies. He said last year he was budgeted $2,935 to buy text books for the three grades at the Deer Hill. The school has 342 students, said Callahan, meaning he had just $8.58 per student to buy textbooks. The normal textbook costs $30.

Callahan asked for $16,000 to buy textbooks, and an additional $38,000 for supplies. If he gets what he asks for, he will have control of 4.1 percent of his budget, as compared to 2.4 percent last year. "And that still isn't high enough," he said.

Callahan's total budget request is $183,561, an increase of $83,645 over last year's budget.

"My budget also is a need budget," said middle/high school principal Dr. Michael Jones at the start of his presentation.

His budget would add an English, math, science and social studies teacher at the middle school levels, a school-year secretary, and a full-time custodian. He said class size at the middle school level threatens to top out at 29 students per class. Jones also wants to name official heads of the fine art and math departments.

"[The budget] is pretty much level-funded, with some very modest increases" Jones said. "We simply need more textbooks, and need new supplies."

Acting Athletic Director Ron Ford said he would like to add varsity girls softball to the sports program, as well as reinstate the "no-cut" policy at the middle school level, for a $23,000 increase of the athletic budget.

A fully-funded budget would increase the middle/high school budget by $298,037, to $4,314,759.

"I feel this is a very responsible budget," Jones told the committee.

Malvey said that budget discussions were "by no means finished. It is a work in progress." One of the wrenches thrown into the gears is the special educational budget. Malvey said student service head Steven Kaplan has not yet submitted his budgetary needs for the upcoming school year, and the current budget numbers reflect a level-funded special education budget.

The school committee next meets Dec. 21 at 7 p.m.

COHASSET CARES

Gift suggestions

By Allan MacDonald
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

For what they are worth, here are some ideas for Christmas presents:

Patronize the Cohasset Consignment Shop, Cohasset's classiest example of re-use (the RTF's Boutique being a close second).

Buy some low-flow shower nozzles for family and friends. A free-flowing nozzle can use around five gallons of water a minute, while a low-flow uses about one gallon a minute. So many people don't even have any water and die daily because of it.

Buy fluorescent lights instead of incandescent. Compact fluorescents are available now in various sizes and configurations and save a lot of energy.

Obtain an energy audit for your home. Usually they're free of charge, and they save you and the world lots of energy, meaning money and resources.

We developed countries use 75 percent of the world's resources. It would take five planets like other Earths to enable our six billion people to share in the same kind of lifestyle we currently enjoy.

Cohasset RECYCLING TRANSFER Facility
Cohasset green to recycle everything

The Heifer Project is offering trees and bees, new this year. How about presenting some less fortunate people a tree or some bees to give them more chances for a decent life? $10 for tree seedlings, $60 for a tree; $30 for a gift of bees. (800) 698-2511

Books make great presents. How about used books? Second-hand books are so cheap and so available. Or new, may I recommend "Ethics for the New Millennium," by the Dalai Lama? Or "The Voice of the Earth," by Theodore Roszak?

How about a composter if you haven't made one of your own? Available at the RTF for $25, complete with instructions. Really cuts down on your garbage. PAYT coming in July.

Don't let the tapwater run while washing dishes or shaving or brushing your teeth. This would make tremendous daily gift-giving.

Plan your trips with the car so as to save oil and gas and curb air pollution, a great personal gift to the world and to subsequent generations.

Care about one another. Small acts count. Everyday gifts. See you next time.

Ordelheide leaves Revitalization Corp.

tion should be reporting to the town," said Ordelheide. "What we need is the whole town involved, not the rich people, and that is how it is perceived. The rich people are trying to put this down the citizen's throats, we're trying to railroad it...I don't want to push it down their throat."

It was that opinion that made him reevaluate the current process. "If other townspeople aren't willing to give their money towards it, maybe they don't want it that way," he said. "I just want to keep it simple."

Instead, Ordelheide said he plans on working directly with the town to "spruce" the downtown up, and said he and Roy still remain friends.

Murray Campbell, an ardent supporter of the CRC who has been working with the group as a representative from the Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation, lashed out against citizens who rejected the CRC out of hand.

"I'm sure the insulting remarks made by a lot of townspeople in the petition probably soured him," he said. "It's something a lot of people figured would happen."

Campbell is familiar with private corporations making improvements to public structures. The Cohasset Lightkeepers Corporation renovated the town-owned Lightkeepers Residence on Government Island. But Campbell said is "appalled by the mean spirited remarks" made by people in the town about Roy, Ordelheide and the CRC, and is now doubtful about whether the group will be able to achieve any of its goals.

The CRC has held public meetings to discuss proposed changes to the downtown and harbor areas, including improved sidewalks in the village, creation of a promenade around the harbor area, and the burying of utilities underground.

"I'm not very confident they were going to do much anyway, given the negative reaction of the loudmouths in town, the passiveness of people who would like something to be done, and hurdles they'd need to jump through even if they do get approval," Campbell said.

CRC Executive Director Dean Rizzo said he didn't know "all the specifics" surrounding Odelheide's departure, but did say he thought some of the reasons stemmed from public perception of the proposal. Nonetheless, Rizzo said the CRC is still moving forward. "Peter Roy is still very much in support of continuing the public process and looking at improvements to the village and harbor," he said. Rizzo said the CRC is planning another workshop on village improvements sometime in January.

But Linda Shropshire, the spokesperson for Roy, said he is evaluating public support for the revitalization efforts. "In January, February and March we're going to be having some fundraising events and dinners, and assess if this is something we really want to do," she said. "We only want to continue if there is widespread community support, and support and commitments from leading families in the community.

"We just want to play it out for a few more months and see where the level of support is. He's not going to do this on his own."

Revaluation to get underway

The Cohasset assessors will conduct a state-mandated revaluation for fiscal year 2002. By law the assessors are mandated to value property within 10 percent plus or minus of the real estate market. Town meeting determines the budget within the constraints of Proposition 2-½. A revaluation of property values cannot result in added town spending. When property values increase substantially the tax rate generally decreases. If market trends continue, there could conceivably be increases of property values from 20 to 30 percent in some neighborhoods. All other things being equal, if this is the case the tax rate will decrease by a like amount.

Cohasset along with most cities and towns in Massachusetts has been experiencing a robust real estate market due to the healthy economy. In an effort to keep pace with the appreciation in the market the assessors have conducted interim adjustments for fiscal year's 2000 and 2001. The overall valuation of the town increased by 6 percent for fiscal year 2000 and 7 percent for fiscal year 2001.

The Board of Assessors submitted to the Department of Revenue the necessary forms for the approval of the Fiscal 2001 Tax Rate after the annual classification hearing with the Board of Selectmen. The Board of Selectmen voted a single tax rate for Fiscal 2001. The new tax rate will be $14.59.

This press release was provided by the assessors' office at Town Hall.

GOP holiday party is Sunday

Cohasset GOP chairman, Janet Fogarty, announced that co-chairmen Marjorie Smith and Edythe Ford will recruit gourmet cooks to prepare festive holiday canapés for the holiday party to be held Sunday, Dec. 17, at the oceanfront home of Will and Marjorie Smith, 400 Atlantic Ave., Cohasset, from 5 p.m. to 7:30 p.m.

Fogarty said special invited honored guests will be Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, Rep. Mary Jeanette Murry and Sue and Jamie Bush of Hingham.

Fogarty also said new residents of Cohasset are welcome. Donation is $15 per person and all must make reservations by calling Julie Guil 781-383-6443, Polly Logan 383-0031, Janet Fogarty 383-3036.

Hope comes in all kinds of packages, big and small and each person defines it in their special way. This holiday season, we're asking you to help those in need achieve their own definition of Hope by making a donation to Community Newspaper Company's (CNC) Gifts of Hope campaign.

For the past eight years, readers' Gifts of Hope donations have fed local hungry children and families in and around the Boston area. And now, more than ever, more people need your help. Please join the Cohasset Mariner in giving the greatest gift of all – the gift of hope. A donation of any size goes a long way in helping those in need. Here are some helpful statistics to keep in mind while planning your gift:

Wrestlers pin hopes on a return to tourney

Grapplers expect a +.500 mark after last season's first sub-par showing in a decade

By David Ingber

Last year's record for the varsity wrestling team was 8-10-1, deceiving because of the intense Division 1 and 2 competition Cohasset takes on every year. Despite the lofty level of competition (at least in terms of student enrollment numbers), last year was the first losing season coach Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney has had since 1990, and he does not feel like going through it again.

"There is no change in schedule," reported Sweeney, in his 18th year as a coach for Cohasset. "We will wrestle probably the most competitive schedule in Massachusetts."

"There is no change in schedule. We will wrestle probably the most competitive schedule in Massachusetts."

The muscle Cohasset will face include Whitman-Hanson, Plymouth South, BC High, Xavarian, Durfee, New Bedford, along with others that schools much larger than C.H.S tremble at facing.

Competing in the always tough Pilgrim Conference, league powerhouses never reign for more than a few years at a time.

"The balance of power is shifting away from Cohasset and Carver," admitted Sweeney. "Rockland would have to be the pre-season favorite."

This does not mean that Cohasset will not put in a serious bid for the league championships, as the Skippers will be led by a core of five experienced seniors, capable of leading Cohasset to a division title.

To start, co-captain Justin Langham, a standout linebacker in the fall, and Antoine Miller have performed well in practice, and impressed Sweeney, in spite of nagging maladies.

"Both Justin Langham and Antoine Miller are coming off injuries," said Sweeney. "I am very pleased with their progress so far, though. They have both been working like they haven't been off at all."

Senior co-captain Dan Duffy, a durable 130-135 pound wrestler, has also been showing some of the younger competitors the ropes.

"He has a lot of experience," appraised Sweeney. "He'll be our leader."

Senior John Hertig, a competitor carrying three sports (soccer and tennis being the other two), brings tremendous athleticism to the team.

"He finished strong last year, and should have a good season," lauded Sweeney.

The final senior on the team, Bea Rankin, is the only girl on the squad, but has no difficulty standing up to male opponents.

"Bea had a good rookie season last year, and should help us this year," proclaimed the coach.

Junior captain Dan Littauer, a varsity wrestler since his freshman year, will also set the tone for the

A fresh outlook

Hockey team looks to put last season's memories on ice

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

You are going to see some exciting games this year," said 32nd year coach Dennis Walsh, of his varsity hockey team. "We've got some guys who can motor."

Indeed, speed will be one of the assets of this squad, who have defeated all three of their preseason opponents to open what looks to be terrific season.

Senior captain Dan Morse, picked last year for the role of captain by his teammates, will hopefully lead Cohasset to a tournament berth.

"[Last year's team] felt he was the one for captain," reported Walsh of Morse, who has played at the varsity level for all four years at Cohasset High School.

Assistant captains for the squad will be seniors Ken Portanova and Jim Trahon, both durable, hard working players.

The other defensemen for the squad include freshman Mike Devine and junior Eric Libby, playing his first year with Cohasset after two years at Xavarian. Morse will team up with Tim Straughn for another very tough defensive line.

Another line will consist of junior Pete Whoriskey, junior Chris Caron, who made, as Walsh called it "the ultimate sacrifice, playing goalie when we had none," two years ago, and sophomore speedster John Durkin.

Juniors Dave Bouchard and Sean Chase will team up with Portanova for what will hopefully be a prolific offensive line.

But it is still early in the season, where nothing is etched in stone.

"These lines are not set, but we are going to try them," smiled Walsh.

Junior Dan Kinchla, who just finished a great season as a midfielder for the soccer team, will be the new goalie for the Skippers, replacing last season's netminder Steve Mikkanen, who moved away.

"(Kinchla) went to goalie school over the summer, and we are pleased with him," said Walsh, a football and hockey player for St Francis Xavier, the college of his homeland, Canada. "I think that goalie is the most difficult position in any sport. He is under stress for 60 minutes."

The new players for Walsh include Libby, Anderson, Devine, and freshmen Robbie Carpenter and Mark Davis.

"They are good skaters and also good hockey players," effused Walsh.

All-Scholastic Field Hockey Team

Three Cohasset girls named among elite

When undertaking a project such as this, it's a given that difficult choices will have to be made. On that front, this job was everything we expected and more.

In the process of naming this team, we requested and received input from several area coaches. We tried to consider the best players regardless of what school they played for.

There were several difficult decisions, and many of those named as High Honorable Mentions nearly made this team.

There was, however, one decision we simply could not make. Virtually everyone we asked about the goaltending honor begged off, saying it was too difficult to make a call between Cohasset's Krysten Considine and Hanover's Lisa Bellantoni . We likewise decided to save ourselves the anguish of choosing, and ruled it a tie.

Without further ado, here's the team we chose:

Andi Shaughnessy (Sr. Capt.)-Cohasset- Forward

Andi finished second in the South Shore League in scoring this year (16 goals and seven assists), finishing behind only Hanover's Michaelyn Bortolotti…A three time South Shore League All-Star….Also named to the Patriot Ledger All-Star team this year…She plans on playing field hockey in college, but is undecided at this time between Providence, Stonehill and St. Anselm… Cohasset coach Debbie Bostwick: "Andi is just an all around fantastic player. She's always moving and seems to be on the ball all the time. She also has a knack of being in the right place at the right time, and knocking in rebounds. She was the one player on our team who opposing teams always set their sites on stopping."

Michaelyn Bortolotti (Sr. Capt.) - Hanover - Forward

Led her team and the South Shore League in scoring with 22 goals and 20 assists for the SSL champion Lady Indians…The three-year starter and league All-Star scored two of the SSL All-Star team's three goals to defeat the Patriot League All-Stars…She was a force in front of the net, involved in all of the team's penalty corners and was the number one penalty stroker on the team…Helped lead the team to an undefeated regular season (13-0-3), which was capped in a tough 2-1 overtime loss to Dedham in the South Sectional quarterfinals…Hanover, the number one seed, finished at 14-1-3…Bortolotti was heavily rewarded for her stellar season earning All-State, Globe, and Herald All-Scholastic honors…Bortolotti, who also plays basketball and softball, is ranked 12th in her class and is a member of the National Honor Society…She would like to attend Colby College, where she will play field hockey and softball. Hanover coach Judy Schneider: "She did a great job for us this year. When we had to score, she was right there. She has a tremendous ability to move the ball and has great speed. She's only gotten better over the years."

Stephanie Godfrey (Sr. Capt.)- Silver Lake- Left Wing

Stephanie scored six goals to go along with five assists this season. However, head coach Marilyn Lopes estimates that the three year starter actually had a hand in 75 to 80 percent of the Lakers' goals this season...Old Colony League All-Star...Stephanie also runs track for Silver Lake...She would like to continue her field hockey career in college and is looking at Salva Regina and St. Anselm College, among others...Coach Lopes: "Stephanie is one of the best players I've coached in my (12 year) career. She's a gifted athlete, but the real reason she's been able to shine is her work ethic. She works extremely hard in practice and in games."

Godfrey

Kristen Smeriglio (Sr.) - Hingham - Forward

Scored eight goals and added four assists to lead both the team and the Patriot League...Was a key forward on the league champion Harborwomen team, always on the attack...Won the Best Offensive Player Award from her teammates...Was a Patriot League All-star...Often caused headaches for her opponents as her small size and superior stick work allowed her to weave in and out of defenders.... Is most proud of her play in Hingham's 1-1 tie with Scituate in which she scored the game-tying goal with just :41 seconds left to play...Smeriglio, who has played basketball, softball and lacrosse at Hingham High, is looking to attend either Boston University or Northeastern University, where she will consider continuing her field hockey career. Hingham coach Meredith Gordon: "She was our little sniper. She's tiny, but she'll take your head off. She has a nose for the goal and a quick release. Her performance on the field was driven by finesse, not power."

Smeriglio

Emily Connell (Sr. Capt.)- Scituate - Midfielder

A three year starter at midfielder for the Lady Sailors...A Patriot League All-Star...Emily would like to continue playing field hockey in college, though it may be at the intramural or club level...She is currently considering Providence, Fairfield and the University of Connecticut, and has an eye towards becoming a high school English Teacher...Scituate coach Marcia McKeever: "Emily just controlled the middle of the field for us this season, and showed an incredible amount of dedication and hustle even when things weren't going our way."

Connell

Marisa Hourihan (Sr.) - Hanover - Offensive/Defensive Midfielder

Scored nine goals and added 15 assists for the South Shore League champs...The three year starter and SSL All-Star was well known on the South Shore for her ability to hit the ball, hard and flat, and for her superior stick skills...Had an assist in Hanover's tough 2-1 South Sectional quarterfinal loss to Dedham, the team's only loss of the season...A three sport athlete, Hourihan is the starting goalie on the ice hockey team and is a catcher on the softball team...She played a major role in all of Hanover's offensive and defensive corners and was a key to the team's strength in the midfield...Hourihan, a league and All-State, Patriot Ledger, and Enterprise All-Scholastic, is considering a number of Div. 1 colleges, tops on her list are Providence, Northeastern, Niagara, and Boston College, where she would like to continue her ice hockey career. Hanover coach Judy Schneider: "She's just a great competitor and is probably the toughest player I've ever coached. She's got such a hard shot and I just love to watch her dribble. Her stick skills are tremendous and she's got the hardest drive around."

Hourihan

Catherine Howlett (Sr. Capt.) - Hingham - Offensive Midfielder

Scored three goals and added eight assists for the Patriot League champion Harborwomen...She was the second leading scorer in the league, behind only her own teammate... Preferably a forward, Howlett came up big in the midfield for coach Meredith Gordon, who needed someone she could trust to run the game...She is particularly proud of her play in Hingham's tough 1-0 loss to the SSL champs Hanover...Howlett, a Patriot League All-star, was a force in the midfield, continually winning balls and clearing to the front...Came up big in games against East Bridgewater, the Patriot League runners up...Played most of the season with a strained back...Howlett is looking to attend Connecticut College, where she is being recruited for field hockey. Hingham coach Meredith Gordon: "She's one of the best players I've had in years. She reads the game beautifully. She distributes the ball well and has superior stick work. As good a player as she is, I still don't think she's touched her full potential."

Howlett

Lisa Trebino (Sr.) - Hingham - Defensive Midfielder

A quiet force in the midfield for Hingham, Trebino was a defensive gem...A three-year starter, Trebino dominated the midfield with her subtlety, which helped Hingham capture the Patriot League crown...Trebino, also a tennis player, caught the MIAA's eye, capturing the Sportsmanship Award...She was also picked by her teammates as the Best Defensive Player of the Year...She is most proud of her play in Hingham's away contest at Silver Lake where she fought particularly hard in the midfield in a 2-0 loss...Trebino would like to attend Middlebury College in Vermont and is considering continuing her field hockey and tennis careers. Hingham coach Meredith Gordon: "She's one of those players who goes unnoticed, but gets things done. She just goes about her business and is so subtle. She has a good recovery and is very steady."

Trebino

Sarah Kidder (Sr. Capt)- Cohasset - Defensive Midfielder

A two time South Shore League All-Star...Also a Patriot Ledger All-Star...a converted soccer player (she was a goalie for the C.H.S team her freshman year)...She is looking to continue her field hockey career in college and is looking at Colgate, Middlebury and Willam & Mary, among others...The fact that, despite the late start in the sport, she became one of the most feared stick handlers and drivers in the South Shore League is a testament to her work ethic, asserts coach Deb Bostwick.... Bostwick: "Sarah has great strength, speed and agility, but her best attribute is her love of the game. That just really comes across. She was also a great leader both on and off field."

Kidder

Kathleen Brosnahan (Sr.)- Norwell - defense

A South Shore League All-Star...Kathleen would like to continue playing in college, but it may be at the intramural or club level, as she will be choosing a university based primarily on academics...she would like to major in something in the field of science, and the leading candidates at this time are New York University and McGill University in Montreal... Norwell coach Kathy O'Donnell: "I'd put Kathleen on a scale with any defensive player in the South Shore League this year. She was sensational game in and game out, and kept us in a lot of games we had no business being in."

Brosnahan

Lisa Bellantoni (Sr. Capt.) - Hanover - Goalie

Saw 101 shots and saved 98 of them in 18 games played for the South Shore League champs...Recorded 11 shutouts and only allowed 11 goals compared to 68 that Hanover scored this year for a .61 goals against average...Had 12 saves in the Lady Indians' 2-1 overtime loss to Dedham in the South Sectional quarterfinals...Came up big in contests against Cohasset, the South Shore League runners up, posting high save numbers in a 2-1 win and 1-1 tie...Bellantoni, a two-year starter and Patriot Ledger All-star, was the starting keeper in the SSL's 3-1 win over the Patriot League in the All-Star game...Bellantoni, who also plays basketball and softball, is looking to attend St. Anselm College, where she plans to continue her field hockey career. Hanover coach Judy Schneider: "She's a great leader. We could always depend on Lisa. In goal, she covers angles well and can go for high balls as well. She's great to have out there because she's like another coach. She constantly spoke to her teammates on the field. She knows the strategy and was always positive."

Bellantoni

Krysten Considine (Sr.)- Cohasset- Goalie

The senior had 12 shutouts and allowed just seven goals in 17 regular season games for the 14-1-2 Lady Clippers, both South Shore League bests...A South Shore League All-Star and Patriot Ledger All-Star....voted team MVP... She has been recruited by New England College (New Hampshire), and may be in line for some scholarship money, a rarity in field hockey....Coach Debbie Bostwick called her the team clown, and considered that an additional asset she brought to the team this year, saying "Krysten kept us loose. She'd crack a joke when everyone was feeling the pressure, and that would lighten things up."...As for Considine's play, Coach Bostwick appraised: "Everything just clicked for Krysten this year. She saved us too many times to count. For someone as tall as she is, it's amazing how agile she is. This season she just really learned to play the angles, and became a great overall goalie."

Registration for youth lacrosse

Cohasset Youth Lacrosse will hold its sign-up for the spring season on Saturday, Jan. 6 ,from 10 a.m. to noon at Cohasset High School.

Registrations will be taken in the 14 and under (7th and 8th graders), 12 and under and 10 and under age groups.

The youth lacrosse program is dedicated to introducing children to the sport. All players receive roughly equal playing time regardless of ability. Cohasset participates in the Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League, the nation's largest youth program which does not keep standings or have playoffs.

The youth program is expected to field one team in the oldest and youngest groups, with two teams scheduled for the under 12 level. There is a smaller chance that the program will add a second 10 and under team.

The youth program is expected to field one team in the oldest and youngest groups, with two teams scheduled for the under 12 level. There is a smaller chance that the program will add a second 10 and under team. In spite of the likely addition of at least one additional team, roster spots at all levels will be limited and it is possible that some youngsters will be turned away.

With that in mind, parents should expect Jan. 6 to be the only opportunity to sign up. Notes Chuck Jaffe, coordinator of the youth lacrosse program: "We filled all of our roster spaces on registration day last year, and I expect to do the same again on Jan. 6. We'll do our best to accommodate everyone who signs up that day, but we don't have many options once we run out of roster spots."

The one-time registration fee is $90, which includes a uniform, practice jersey and a youth membership in US Lacrosse, the national governing body for lacrosse. US Lacrosse membership includes a subscription to a new magazine especially designed for kids. Late registrations, if roster spots are available are $120.

The program is limited to Cohasset residents. At the 14 and under level, a player can sign up for the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program regardless of whether they are active on Cohasset's Middle School team.

In general, games are played Sunday afternoons. Practices for kids in 5th grade and up are tentatively scheduled for Monday and Friday afternoons; the Under-10 team's practices are expected to be on Friday afternoons. The teams will begin practicing in early March, begin playing games in April and conclude the season at MBYLL Jamboree, played at Fort Devens in mid-June.

In addition to players, the program is looking for additional coaches at all levels.

Lacrosse is a contact sport; at all levels, practices and games include hitting. In accordance with Mass Bay Youth Lacrosse League rules, all players must be equipped with sticks, gloves, shoulder and elbow pads, and helmets with mouthpieces. Hockey helmets are not allowed, although hockey arm and shoulder pads are (hockey gloves are not flexible enough to allow a squad, after two straight outstanding seasons.

"Dan Littauer wrestled at states twice and, this being his junior year, he should do very well," noted Sweeney.

Doug Sheerin and Peter Buckley, Sweeney's assistant coaches, will help the head coach manage this very young team. Buckley, a captain of Sweeney's squad in 1988, will replace the highly respected Deke Conklin on Middle School detail.

Conklin worked with the younger wrestlers for years, but is now taking two years away from Cohasset to coach his grandson.

"I am very pleased with the younger kids because Deke did such a good job with them," offered Sweeney. "This is one of the better freshman classes I've had in a while."

Sheerin will be working more with varsity and junior varsity on the form of his wrestlers.

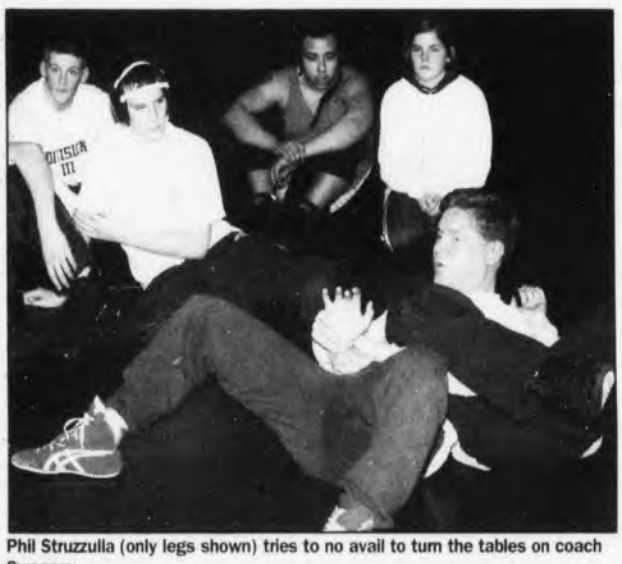
"He's an excellent technician," stated Sweeney.

Practices, which started two weeks ago, have focused around endurance more than anything else. Sweeney has had his team run both in the gym and on the track.

"I'm very pleased with how hard the kids have been working," reported Sweeney. "We are going to have to be in great shape."

Following in the footsteps of the legendary 1998-'99 season, where the Skippers won the Sectionals and finished second in all of Massachusetts, Cohasset is on a quest to return to its status as one of the toughest teams around.

"I am confident we can do it," Sweeney summed up simply.



Phil Struzzulla (only legs shown) tries to no avail to turn the tables on coach Sweeney.

Swimmers set to dive into season

Cohasset/Scituate squad gets a new coach

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

With a new coach, a new organization, and new participants, the Scituate/Cohasset varsity swim team is preparing for the upcoming season.

Jamie Kearney, replacing last year's coach Mary Ferazzi, will lead the Sailors/Skippers after gaining experience coaching in Westwood.

"It is different because it was 10 years ago that I started coaching," stated Kearney, a native of Scituate, and a former teacher who now owns a business with her husband.

Seniors Chris Golden of Cohasset and Jen Foley of Scituate were selected by their teammates last year for the two co-captain spots, and have stepped into the roles as primary motivators very well.

"I'm thrilled," appraised Kearney about their selection as captains. "They are great leaders, all the good stuff' is coming from them."

Golden, Foley and others have also put in an enormous effort to cut down on the segregation between the two towns.

"They are great," smiled Kearney. "They have really made an effort to get to know each other. We don't differentiate at all."

A former 500 yard specialist, Kearney has focused many of her practices around the endurance. Though many of her practices contain sets of sprints, one right on top of the next, and the practices are upwards of 3,000 yards, the 500 is still Kearney's favorite.

"That one holds a special place in my heart," she laughed.

Primarily made up of female swimmers, the Sci/Coh squad will be taking on a number of all boys schools. When asked if that would be at all awkward, Kearney smiled and replied: "Yeah, when we beat them."

In fact, Cohasset does stand a fighting chance against even some of the top notch swim teams in the area. Garret Jacobucci, a nationally ranked female Gator from Scituate, will most assuredly lead the charge to break the gender barrier.

"She is our secret weapon," smirked Kearney.

With 34 swimmers between the two towns, one might assume that the last thing this program would be forced to deal with is financial troubles at all. One would be mistaken. This team was dangerously close to being cut from the schools' athletics programs

"[Cohasset Athletic Director Ron] Ford told me, 'if they don't get a coach, they won't get a team,'" recalled Kearney, a former year round swimmer for the Barracudas.

Kearney is a firm believer that swimming should certainly be supported by the budget, as it is a sport that can be enjoyed long after high school.

"When you're swimming, you are in your own world," said Kearney. "Swimming is a sport that is a lifetime benefit: you can still swim when you are 80 years old. It really taps into an individual, motivational aspect."

The team, which practices at the Weymouth MDC pool, manages to stay bouyant (no pun intended) despite the long bus hours to and from practice.

"I give every kid credit just for diving in there," said Kearney, who obviously wishes there was a closer facility available. "They study on the way home on the bus. These are kids who are truly committed. It was so hard to get this going this year, and they are really committed to making this work."

Because of the travel time, the team can only practice for one hour, three days a week.

"Wouldn't it be great if we had a pool for these kids who dedicate themselves," posed Kearney rhetorically.

The squad will open its season at Quincy, and will have nine dual meets, followed by an All-Conference meet in February.

Walsh has been overwhelmed by the dedication shown by his squad, who have not once complained about their practices three days a week at 4:45 am..

"I was impressed with them," laughed Walsh. "They even asked if we could start practice earlier."

The coaches would also like to give thanks to a very supportive Booster's Club, with "a couple stars" from Walsh to Joanne Pilczak.

Assistant coaches Artie Rasmussen and Benji Watson will help Walsh lead the Skippers in what may well be Walsh's last season before retirement.

Watson, who is rejoining Walsh on the bench this season after a four year separation, knows about winning, as he and Walsh were at the helm of the legendary Cohasset squad of 1988, whose only loss of the season was an overtime heartbreaker to Duxbury on the Boston Garden ice.

After last year's sub-par season of 4-11-2, Walsh hopes to get back on track for his last year as a Skipper coach, opening the season Dec. 13 on the road against Abington/East Bridgewater at he Rockland Ice Arena.

"I think they can do it," said Walsh. "Their objective is to be in the state tournament. We feel we can be very competitive."

child to manipulate and control a lacrosse stick).

Jaffe also notes that the Cohasset program welcomes girls, but that it does not play girls lacrosse, which avoids full contact and is played under different rules and with slightly different equipment. "Many girls play in MBYLL," he said, "but there are adjustments to make when they get older and start playing girls lacrosse."

There will be more information on the Cohasset Youth Lacrosse program available at the Jan 6 sign-up. If you have an age-eligible child and can not attend the registration session, or if interested in volunteering to coach, cal Jaffe at 383-9858.

I would like to recognize the wonderful work being done at the Deer Hill School. For the fourth year in a row, art teacher, Ann Berman is leading children in the knitting of hats to give to the needy. This years special charity is Rosies Place in Boston and so far, more than 100 hats have been made. The children, staff members and even Mr. Callahan all have worked very hard at making these beautiful hats. These hats, along with a special holiday card on each, will be delivered on Dec. 20. What a great accomplishment for all of you and what a great feeling you all must have!

High school clothing drive is underway

Student group involved in many causes

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

This month walking down the halls of Cohasset Middle/High School, a person might notice clothes piled in the hallways, or stuffed into bins, and say to themselves "Boy, I guess teenagers do feel at home here at school."

But it's a mess for a cause.

For the ninth year in a row, Cohasset High School's Social Awareness Organization (SAO) has organized its annual clothing drive, now running until Dec. 23.

"Last year we brought a huge amount of clothes to the Pine Street Inn," said senior Ary Afshar. Afshar is co-chairman of the SAO, along with fellow senior Chris Golden. Now in its tenth year, the SAO has been the driving force behind the student body's involvement in community service.

More than 30 students turned out for one of the group's meetings in early December to revel in the success of its November canned food drive for the Cohasset Food Pantry, and to draw posters for the upcoming clothing drive.

"We brought a truckload of food over there [the pantry at the Second Congregational Church]," said organization faculty advisor Scott Newkirk. The group is also running a "Toys for Tots" program, alongside the clothing drive. The SAO's other activities include starting a letter writing campaign for Amnesty International in January, volunteering to feed the homeless at Father Bill's Place in Quincy, and putting some time in at the Scituate Animal Shelter.

"We're trying to involve the student body," Golden said about the spirit of the group. "We want to promote volunteerism. When we volunteer at Father Bill's Place, some people have never seen a homeless person before, and it needs to be done."

Both Golden, 17, and Afshar, 18, became involved in the group in the seventh grade, when the middle/high school was still combined. Volunteerism isn't new to Afshar, who said her mother Connie, a familiar sight on boards and groups around Cohasset, got her involved with volunteering at an early age. "Ever since I was little, we'd volunteer at a homeless shelter or animal shelter," she said. Afshar hopes other students will understand the importance of giving their time for others. "It's an important group. It gives a lot of kids a view outside of Cohasset," she said.

So far, the club has withstood the test of time, and remains one of the more popular groups at the school.

Other than the student government association, said Golden, "it's the only club with a strong following." He said between 20 and 30 students attend each meeting to either make posters, or sign-up for the next big event.

Forty students participated last October in a breast cancer walk in Boston, and another five or six go to Father Bill's every month. "We can't do it [the numerous activities] with five people, we need a big group," Golden said. The group also participated in Hingham's SIDS road race this past September and the American Cancer Society's Relay for Life, held last June.

"The tough part is picking what we want to do," said Golden. "Instead of doing a lot of things, we do a few things and do them well."

Newkirk said the only thing he has to do as an advisor is keep Afshar's and Golden's enthusiasm reeled in. But every other aspect, from organizing the event, to arranging car-pools, is taken care of by Afshar and Golden. "I just keep them focused," he said.

As nice as awards or commendations are, the SAO isn't looking for any.

"We get acknowledgements, but we don't care," said Newkirk. "We don't go and look for it [awards]. We do it be cause we want to."

"Kids are a lot more aware than people think we are," added Afshar.

The SAO is accepting any type of clothing until Dec. 23, though winter clothes are preferred, as are children's clothes. Items don't have to be new, but wearable. No socks or undergarments will be accepted.

Curtain to close on CHS auditorium during building

Tech position, class sizes are topics

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Superintendent Edward Malvey announced last week that the middle/high school auditorium will be closed during most of the upcoming school construction project.

"Because of the phasing, changes in piping, temporary walkways and other combined effects, I'm going to make the administrative decision that it be off-limits," he told the school committee last Thursday.

Malvey said because he can't tell exactly when what work will be going on where, he isn't able to guarantee its availability and urged all groups that normally use the space to count on it not being open. But he did say it could be open "periodically" as construction permits.

"If it's open, if available, if we're able to allow [an event] to go forward, then fine," he said, "but [groups who use it] will have to make alternate plans."

The middle/high school will see the 75,000 square-foot building expand into a 140,000-square foot complex with a new athletic center, cafeteria, and interior. Construction is expected to begin in April with demolition of the existing library.

The auditorium's stage rigging was replaced recently after an inspection raised some questions about its integrity.

Osgood tech position

Osgood School parents Susan Galligan and Adrianne McCarthy asked the school committee to reconsider funding a second technology instructor position, but were rebuffed again.

Last month, Galligan and McCarthy asked the committee to authorize using the $12,000 earmarked for the purchase of a van on the position for the remainder of the school year instead. They said they believed the Osgood School PSO could raise the funds needed for the van.

However, after a meeting with the Cohasset Education Foundation which declined the grant request, McCarthy said funding the position should be a higher priority than the van.

"There is no time to wait for the educational process, but there is time to wait for the purchase of the van," she said. "We want to reinstate a program that's already suffering."

The position was cut last spring as part of the FY-2001 school budget.

But the committee adamantly disagreed, saying the money should be spent on the van. Committee chairman Pat Martin said former athletic director Clark Chatterton, who died this past June of cancer, had put together a report last year, saying the school system would see a significant savings in the transportation budget with the purchase of a van. Right now, even small teams like the tennis team, have to rent a full-size bus to get to and from their matches.

"I trust the administration," Martin said. "[Chatterton] was a whiz with the transportation numbers."

Both committee member Mark DeGiacomo and Superintendent Edward Malvey said the money has already been committed to the van, and the promise should be kept.

"The problem with coming in after the fact is that promises have already been made," DeGiacomo said, adding, "I hope something can be worked out. We all understand and the administration agrees the position should be reinstated. The only question is money."

"We need to stick with the plan," added Malvey. He also questioned whether it would be financially smarter to buy a van or "rent" a teacher. "I doubt it makes a lot of sense to bring someone in for the last two months [of the school year]."

Class sizes

Middle-high school principal Dr. Michael Jones addressed parental concerns about overcrowding in seventh-grade classrooms. Due to the unexpected large size of the grade — 115 students — average class size is pushing 29 students per class, three students higher than projected.

Ideally, Jones told the school committee, he would create an additional section of math, English, science, and social studies, equating to one additional full-time position. However, he said, it would be nearly impossible to find someone certified in all four disciplines, and even though it might be possible to find someone certified in two, the disruption caused by rearranging schedules and reassigning teachers would negate any of the positives.

"I think we can cope for this year," he said, but added that he would ask for four additional middle school teachers in the FY-2001 budget.

Committee member Stephanie Noble asked Jones to include his letter explaining the current situation in the next school newsletter sent to parents.

Osgood community welcomes five new teachers

Allison Lapinski

Heather Topor

Kevin Dykas

Kelly Perrault

Jennifer Thorell

The Osgood School community welcomes five new teachers working in first grade, third grade, and physical education. These teachers bring a variety of experience, education, and talents to the Osgood School; and the faculty, students, and parents look forward to sharing a successful school year with them.

Allison Lapinski and Jennifer Thorell are Osgood's newest first-grade teachers. Miss Lapinski graduated with a bachelor of arts from Framingham State College and a master of arts in elementary education from Rhode Island College. She worked as an educator at Rhode Island School for the Deaf and as both a substitute teacher and a tutor in the Hanover Public Schools. Miss Lapinski was inspired to become a teacher by her own second-grade teacher, Mrs. MacMillan. During Miss Lapinski's clinical experience in college, she returned to Mrs. MacMillan's classroom, this time as a student teacher. Currently, Miss Lapinski is pursuing her second master's degree; she is studying special education at Eastern Nazarene College.

Miss Thorell earned her undergraduate degree at Stonehill College, where she majored in elementary education and psychology. She worked as an instructional aide and a substitute teacher at the Osgood School prior to her new teaching assignment. Miss Thorell aspires to be the type of teacher who makes a positive impact in her students' lives. She is pursuing a master's degree in reading education at Bridgewater State College.

The new third-grade staff members are Kelly Perrault and Heather Topor. Ms. Perrault earned a bachelor of arts from North Adams State College and a master's in education from the University of Massachusetts at Boston. A native of Dedham, she worked as a teacher's aide in the same elementary school she attended and taught fourth grade in Shrewsbury last year. Ms. Perrault enjoys teaching through technology. She hopes to teach her students how to conduct research on the Internet and how to design a multi-media presentation.

Like Ms. Perrault, Heather Topor has returned to her elementary school as an educator. The former Heather Brennock cites Faith (Bowker) Maloney, a former Osgood teacher, as her inspiration for becoming a teacher. She states that her additional positive experiences in the Cohasset public schools helped her decide on a career as a teacher. Mrs. Topor graduated with a bachelor's degree in elementary education from Westfield State College. She worked in the Weymouth school system, most recently as a fourth-grade teacher. Currently, Mrs. Topor is pursuing a Master's degree in education at the UMass Boston.

Kevin Dykas is the new physical education teacher at the Osgood School. Mr. Dykas earned a bachelors of science degree in physical education from Keene State College in New Hampshire and is pursuing a master's degree in elementary physical education from Bridgewater State College. For the last seven years he worked as a physical education teacher in Berkley, a small town south of Taunton. While working at the Berkley Community School, Mr. Dykas emphasized activities that promote health, fitness, and fun such as "Jump Rope for the Heart," "NFL Punt, Pass, and Kick," "Hop-a-thon," and a summer sports camp for children in grades K-6. Mr. Dykas plans to help the Osgood students sharpen their jump-rope skills this year, culminating with a jump-rope performance for family and friends.

The whole Osgood School community welcomes the additional enthusiasm, experience, and commitment to teaching and learning that these new faculty members bring to the school.

Presented by Elizabeth Owens-Rigby, Cohasset Teachers Association.

Speech therapist attends convention

Denise Yess

Denise Yess, a speech and language pathologist at the Joseph Osgood School, has recently returned from the American Speech and Hearing Association Convention held in Washington, D.C., this November. Yess, a resident of Scituate, was elected to the Association's Public School Division and is one of five Steering Committee members representing public schools in that organization. She will represent public school therapists across the country. Some of her responsibilities will be to generate topics for study, assist speech/language pathologists in accessing needed information and to encourage on-going exchange of specific strategies and techniques as well as help resolve issues and concerns relevant to her profession. Yess will be responsible for supporting her colleagues nationally, contributing ideas and information through newsletters and by generation ideas for continuing education for her colleagues. She will participate in the annual summer "Schools Council" for her colleagues and, as part of her duties for the coming year, Yess will provide guidance and support for the 2001 convention.

Yess, a former adjunct professor at Bridgewater State College and Newbury College, has been guest lecturer at Emerson College. She has supervised undergraduate and graduate students working toward their professional certification. Yess has provided several in-services to faculty members of Cohasset Schools. Her most recent in-service was in the area of phonemic awareness. Yess hopes to use her position on the American Speech and Hearing Association Steering Committee to foster greater understanding of her field and the evolving changes currently underway.

to Maine. Tyler decided to stay at his father's home and work the details out with the landlord. But the landlord apparently wanted more than Tyler could give.

"The landlord said he was going to treat my family like brand-new tenants, even though we had been living there for a little while when my Dad retired," Tyler said. "I had $800 saved up for rent when my Dad left, but the landlord wanted $2,400."

In the end, Tyler told the landlord he couldn't pay that much money. In turn, the landlord got a court-ordered eviction for Tyler and his family, and they were of the house in June 1998.

To make matters even worse, the landlord put all of Tyler and his family's belongings into storage, and because he couldn't pay the large storage fees for some time, all of those belongings were since auctioned off. Tyler said certain storage facilities have time limits as to how long things can be kept there.

"We lost everything—my kids' toys, furniture, even my pictures of my Mom who died," Tyler said. "Everything we had was just gone. The fee for getting our stuff back from the storage place was like $500 a month, and we couldn't pay that."

Tyler, his wife, and their kids had found themselves on the street.

"We put our kids with family members, and then my wife and I moved in with friends in Cambridge," Tyler said. "But our friend's house was actually a crack house."

Tyler said he and his wife remained there for a little over a month. While he was there, Tyler found himself doing large amounts of cocaine and smoking a lot of pot.

"On July 13 (1998), I woke up at that house, turned to my wife and said 'I can't do this anymore,'" Tyler said, referring to his drug use at the time. "We got out of there at that moment."

From there, Tyler and his wife went to Boston and checked into a shelter.

"You could only go there after 7 p.m. and you had to leave there by 6 a.m.," Tyler said of the shelter. "So during the day, we would just walk the streets of Boston."

Soon, Tyler's wife became pregnant. He said because of certain liability issues, he and his wife were no longer allowed to stay at the shelter, so they tried a couple of other low-key shelters around the city.

"Some of those other shelters were really bad," Tyler said. "In some of them, you can hear rats running around, and sometimes I would literally feel them running over me while I was sleeping."

Tyler and his wife figured it would be better to live outside, so they ended up taking blankets and the other minimal items they had and moved to Boston Common.

"It's scary, the things I saw while we were living there," Tyler said. "One of the big problems I noticed was a large amount of runaway teens. You see young teenage girls out there one minute begging for food on the street, the next minute you see them all dressed up hanging out with pimps. It's heartbreaking."

But it was one night four months after they had moved into the Common which made Tyler say "Enough is enough."

"The last night we slept in the Common, it was almost Thanksgiving, and it was cold," Tyler said. "There were more than 200 homeless people huddled together. But that same night, while I was sleeping, I woke up to a gun to my head at around 2 a.m.. Fortunately, I knew the guy so he went away. But at 5 a.m., I woke up to a gun to my head again, and that time, my blankets got stolen. I was scared. It was like playing Russian Roulette out there. You could freeze to death or get shot at any given time."

Paul Tyler contemplates his turbulent past few years of life as he struggles to rise above his past at Father Bill's Place in Quincy.

In short, Tyler's wife got into a family shelter in Cambridge and Tyler did a short stint at Father Bill's Place, but he left when his wife gave birth to a new baby. Tyler left Father Bill's and moved into the shelter with his wife and new child. Soon, his wife got a Section 8 voucher, a document from the state which basically helps pay for housing.

The couple soon found an apartment they liked in Revere, but again, luck was not on their side. Because of various delayed inspections of the apartment by certain boards, the time limit on the couple's voucher ran out. They found they could not pay for the apartment without it, so Tyler's wife moved to Winthrop with her aunt.

At the same time, Tyler wound up back on drugs, so he figured he would go back to Father Bill's shelter, which he knew had treatment programs for drug addicts. And that's what he did.

Now, four months later, Tyler is sober again, attending recovery meetings three times a week, and he is working at Stop & Shop. In his spare time, Tyler goes into local schools and talks to kids about drugs and what path they can lead to.

"It's not bad here," Tyler said of Father Bill's Place. "I'm grateful for a place to sleep. A lot of people around here complain a lot, but they haven't had to live on Boston Common. It's hell out there. This place is like the Ritz-Carelton compared to that."

Tyler's plans for the holidays include getting an overnight pass from Father Bill's so he can spend Christmas with his whole family at his wife's aunt's house. And his more long-term plans include getting his own place and moving his family in there. He's also now trying to get a job with the local sheet-metal union, and he is planning on getting the high school diploma he never got years ago.

"Like everyone says, this can happen to you," Tyler said of his homelessness. "I used to see people living on the street and say 'That will never be me,' and here I am years later living in a shelter. And homeless people aren't all drug addicts, alcoholics, criminals, and losers. They're just people."

And although Tyler said there are many reasons why the homelessness situation in Massachusetts is bad, he said there is one big problem contributing to the homeless epidemic.

"What I don't see out there is unconditional love between families," he said. "A lot of homelessness situations could probably be taken care of if member's families looked out for each other a little more."

The name of the subject in this story was changed to protect his identity.

Staircase gallery

Hingham artist Sara "Ginger" Holbrook admits she finds beauty in things many people view as annoying. And the best part is that she profits from doing this.

"I paint subjects that I love which include, for the moment, apples and pears whose shapes and depth of colors fascinate me," says Holbrook, a South Shore Art Center artist.

"Recently I've been intrigued by the stickers on fruit, which most people find annoying, but which sometimes have a special beauty of their own either in what they say or in color or design," she says. "I paint fruit with stickers for their whimsy and as a statement of fact in today's world."

Holbrook's still-life watercolors are on display at South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery in Hingham through the end of December.

Having painted on and off for 27 years, Holbrook was the May-June featured gallery artist at South Shore Art Center for two consecutive years. She graduated from Colby College with a major in English and a minor in art history.

South Shore Conservatory's Staircase Gallery is located at One Conservatory Drive, Hingham. Gallery hours are Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Saturday 9 a.m. to noon.

Bishop post has Cohasset connection

By David McLaughlin
DAMCLAUGHLIN@CNC.COM

Bud Cederholm, 56, the rector at Christ Church in Needham and former Cohasset teacher, is the new bishop suffragan in the Episcopal diocese of Massachusetts.

Cederholm, who has been at the Needham church for 11 years, was elected on Nov. 4 and announced his win to the church the next day. He said he was excited about the new job, though he added he was sad about leaving the church and its members. He said he will miss the friendships he has made there.

"I didn't have a sense about what was going to happen. I was nervous," he said. "It was kind of an emotional roller coaster to be honest."

Almost 30 years after being ordained, Cederholm was nominated for two important posts in the Episcopal Church: assistant bishop for the Massachusetts diocese and bishop in the diocese of Vermont.

"I wasn't shocked and surprised because I've been in the diocese a while," he said of the Massachusetts job. "I'm honored and humbled. It's a job with a lot of responsibility."

> "He has very good experience with working with youth and he has been very active with diversity concerns."
> — The Rev. Clifford Cutler, St. Stephen's

Cederholm ended up in the clergy after he was pulled off the career path he had set for himself in college. While enrolled in the University of Minnesota's ROTC program, he was given at medical discharge and forced to rethink what he was going to do with his life. At the time, he said, he thought about the priesthood, but a bishop recommended he wait before entering the church.

After transferring to Boston University to complete his studies, Cederholm ended up teaching math at Cohasset High School from 1966-68, only to return to CHS after he was ordained in the early 1970s. Back in Cohasset from 1971-76, he even helped start an alternative high school program for high school students. Some of them, he said, had trouble doing well in school, others were just bored.

"I saw all these kids that were not going to graduate and found out their needs went beyond academics," Cederholm said.

Although he enjoyed helping these students, Cederholm wanted to live with his faith more fully, something he couldn't do in a public school. While continuing to teach, he took an associate rector position at St. Stephens in Cohasset and then moved on to be a rector at a church in White River Junction, Vt.

The Rev. Clifford Cutler, who came to St. Stephen's as rector in 1985, said Cederholdm is well thought of and remembered at the parish. Cutler, who knows Cederholm as a colleague, said he is ideal for the post of bishop suffragan which assists the diocesan bishop in a range of matters.

Bud Cederholm

"He has very good experience with working with youth and he has been very active with diversity concerns," Cutler said. "He also has a wonderful sense of humility and graciousness."

Part of Cederholm's job will be to oversee financial concerns, another area in which the former math teacher is well equipped, Cutler said.

While at White River Junction, Vt., Cederholm started a homeless shelter. There was, and still is, a need for the shelter, he said.

"Other than large cities, there aren't many shelters to stay in," said Cederholm, who also sits on the Needham Human Rights Committee. "The shelter has been there 20 years. It's full every night."

During his 30-year career, Cederholm says he's proudest not of the charity work with which he's been involved, but the relationships he has established with people. He wouldn't be a nominee for the two bishop posts without the people he has known and with whom he has worked, he said. In fact, someone from his former parish in Vermont nominated him for the bishop post there.

"Sometimes your paths cross — weddings, funerals — people don't tend to forget each other," he said, adding later: "To me that's an achievement. The achievement of having built these relationships."

With the Massachusetts win, Cederholm dropped out of the Vermont race. He will work out of Boston with two other bishop suffragans, travelling to different parishes throughout the state.

Appalachia Giving Tree travels

During past holiday seasons, you've probably heard of the "Charlie Brown Christmas Tree," the famous Rockefeller Center holiday tree, and even that infamous tree precariously tied to the back of the Grinch's sleigh as he careens down the hill towards Whoville. Now the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project announces the Appalachia Giving Tree. While the tree itself may be artificial, nothing else about it or the project is. By the end of December, the tree will have traveled between four places of worship in Cohasset to bring the message of Appalachia closer to home during this time of reflection and to raise money for the ecumenical ASP groups' 14th pilgrimage to Appalachia in June of 2001.

The tree began its journey at the Second Congregational Church during the first weekend of December. For a minimum donation of $5, people purchase a red ribbon, with their name or the name of a loved one written on it, to tie onto the tree. In addition, they receive a special holiday ornament to place on their tree or hang in their home during the winter season, as a reminder of those less fortunate. The ornaments have been cut by teenage volunteers from asphalt shingles and plywood; symbols for them of the many building projects completed through the years.

On Sunday, Dec. 10, the tree graced the hall of St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, will visit First Parish on Sunday, Dec. 17, and St. Anthony's Catholic Church Dec. 24.

The Cohasset Appalachia Service is a group of more than 150 volunteers who prepare all year for an annual journey to the Appalachia Region of the U.S. to assist in the Appalachia Service Project, Inc., a national home repair ministry.

The volunteer group has been led by the Rev. Gary Ritts of the Second Congregational Church, and his wife, Judy, for 14 years. It's mission is to provide warmer, drier and safer housing for folks in Appalachia. Aside from fund-raising, preparations include 10 months of studying the region, seminars preparing volunteers for immersion in a different culture and environment, construction workshops and mandatory hours of community service in their own town. Many fund-raisers throughout the year help pay for the necessary tools and project needs. This year, the group decided to eliminate the annual Thanksgiving Pie and Super Bowl Sandwich fund-raisers and bring the meaning of Appalachia while raising needed funds through the Giving Tree Project.

Christmas workshop

Christmas worship at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, 16 Highland Ave., features a variety of worship celebrating Christ's birth. The Christmas Eve Family Holy Communion service will be held Sunday, Dec. 24, at 5 p.m. The Jubilate Children's Choir will sing. The star of Bethlehem will be lit on the church tower.

The Festal Holy Communion Service of Christmas Eve will begin at 11 p.m. preceded by a special program of Christmas music to start at 10:30 p.m. The Huntington Chamber Brass will join the St. Stephen's Adult Choir with Music Director Dr. G. Fredrick Guzasky and offer music such as "Hallelujah," "Amen" by Handel and "The Snow Lay on the Ground" by Leo Sowerby. The traditional story from the Gospel of Luke is read from the King James Bible. Candlelight illumines the singing of "Silent Night." The bells of the church carillon will ring out the music of Christmas into the night sky.

Worship on Christmas Day, Monday, Dec. 25, will be at 10 a.m. Sunday morning worship for the Fourth Sunday of Advent, Dec. 24, is at 8 and 10 a.m.

The church school is busy preparing an Epiphany Pageant to take place Sunday, Jan. 7, at 10 a.m. celebrating the appearance of Jesus to the three magi representing all the world. Children will portray angels, shepherds hurrying to Bethlehem, Joseph and Mary with Baby, and of course the three magi.

POLICE BRIEFS

Fight sends two to hospital

Police suspect that alcohol contributed to a fight that sent two Cohasset men to the hospital in the early hours of Saturday morning.

The men, Danny Michael Adams, 29, and James Basler, 36, live in separate apartments at 3 North Main St.

According to the police report, Basler went to police headquarters around 1:30 a.m., to report that Adams had assaulted him with a golf club. Basler was immediately rushed to South Shore Hospital because one of his fingers was almost severed from his right hand, police said. He was then transferred to Massachusetts General Hospital for treatment of his hand. Police were dispatched to 3 North Main St. where they arrested Adams whom, police determined at booking, would be taken to South Shore Hospital for injuries to his head.

The incident is still under investigation but from interviews conducted so far, police said Basler and Adams had apparently been drinking at a bar in Hull. An argument over money later ensued back at 3 N. Main St. that escalated into a fight. Both men also allegedly smashed the windows of each other's motor vehicle.

Police charged Adams with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, malicious destruction of property over $250, and mayhem. Basler was charged with assault and battery and malicious destruction of property over $250.

The men were arraigned on the charges Dec. 11 and are due back in Quincy District Court for a pre-trial conference Jan. 26.

November report

November was a relatively quite month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were 10 arrests, five for possession of a controlled substance, one for assault and battery with a dangerous weapon, one for assault and battery, two for operating under the influence of liquor, and finally one for a warrant, police Chief Brian Noonan said.

In the month of November the police department investigated 13 motor vehicle accidents, three of which resulted in injuries and one of which resulted in a fatality. There were 155 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $3,555 in fines. Additionally, there were 90 parking tickets issued for $2,700 in fines.

Also in the month of November the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 664 calls for police services, of those 111 were Emergency 911 calls.

During November there were six criminal complaints issued and/or applied for.

One breaking and entering of a business was reported in the month of November.

Toys for Tots at police station

The Cohasset Police Department again joins the US Marine Corps in the annual Toys for Tots campaign this holiday season.

New toys and games may be dropped off at the Cohasset Police Station, 62 Elm Court, 24 hours a day, seven days a week. Any questions, please call the Cohasset police at 383-1055. Toys and games should not be Christmas wrapped.

Police officer exam

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts Human Resources Division will hold a Civil Service Examination for entry-level police officers, for the cities and towns and MBTA police on April 28.

Applications must be filed or postmarked no later than Jan. 26. Applications and information about eligibility requirements, application fees and the examination process are available at the Massachusetts Human Resources Division, Customer Service Center, One Ashburton Place, Boston, or call (617) 727-3777, ext. 246 or toll-free at 1-800-392-6178, ext. 246.

Application materials are also available at the Cohasset Police Department and the Cohasset Town Hall, Treasurers Office.

Police memorial fund drive

Cohasset police hope residents will contribute to the Massachusetts Law Enforcement Memorial Foundation that plans to erect a permanent memorial to the 260 officers in the state who were killed in the line of duty. Groundbreaking for the memorial at Ashburton Park at the State Capitol will take place during Police Memorial Week in May 2001.

All donations are tax deductible. Checks should be made out to the Mass. Law Enforcement Memorial Foundation and sent to the Cohasset Police Dept., 62 Elm St., Cohasset 02025. For more information, contact Officer Jeffrey R. Treanor, 383-1055 or 383-1212, evenings.

Eileen Page's new book is designed to help enrich both educators and parents about non-traditional ways of teaching penmanship.

The write stuff

Scituate woman has a passion for penmanship

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Eileen Page can tell a lot about people based on their handwriting.

In fact, she has her own handwriting-based business called Page Enterprises based out of her Scituate home.

"I consider myself a handwriting consultant," Page said. "Anything that concerns handwriting is what I get involved in, and that includes things like instruction, analyzing documents, drawings and anonymous letters, and general handwriting analysis."

In addition to running her own business, Page is also an author. She's released three books on handwriting in the past five years, and just wrapped up publishing her most comprehensive book yet — "A Humanistic Approach to Penmanship."

"It approaches penmanship from a new perspective," Page said. "It doesn't teach the traditional aspects of handwriting. My emphasis is placed on developing one's own unique writing style — I also try to emphasize consistency and legibility."

She said the book is aimed mainly toward educators, but she said it will be very useful for parents as well.

"Quite frankly, I think handwriting is having a comeback. It's not as obsolete as people think. People need good penmanship to fill out applications and even to get certified as a teacher. Kids need penmanship skills to do well on their MCAS tests and also to submit handwritten writing samples to college."
Eileen Page,
handwriting consultant

"A child's writing style originates from the moment he or she picks up a pencil and that style needs to be encouraged. I believe success in terms of penmanship happens when you put the responsibility back on the writer, rather than the educator."
Eileen Page,
handwriting consultant

Page said her way of approaching penmanship goes against the norm because she feels there is not one "correct" way to teach kids how to write. She feels that developing good penmanship is based on how a certain individual feels comfortable doing it

"A child's writing style originates from the moment he or she picks up a pencil and that style needs to be encouraged," Page said. "I believe success in terms of penmanship happens when you put the responsibility back on the writer, rather than the educator."

"My main purpose for writing the new book was to show people a new, more comfortable way to approach handwriting as a writer, or as an instructor of writing."

And when she reads people's handwriting Page said she can tell certain things about those people. According to Page, certain factors of life directly affect people's penmanship — immaturity, delayed dexterity, perceptual limitations, physical handicaps, medication, hyperactivity, emotional disorders, mental deficiencies, low self confidence, negative experiences, lack of adequate handwriting instruction, stress, exhaustion, and anxiety.

"Handwriting can certainly give you an impression of what someone is feeling," Page said.

Page originally graduated from Fitchburg State College with a bachelor of arts degree. In 1971, she moved to Halifax and started a job as a teacher at Halifax Elementary School where she remained until 1996.

Handsome interior design pays off

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

It used to be, if you wanted to use an interior designer or an interior design service, you had to be prepared to spend an arm and a leg. But many interior designers say the cost of good interior decoration doesn't have to be much more than the price of good furniture

Real Estate

Carol Tempesta of Pembroke got the idea to begin her own small interior deign business more than 10 years ago, after she had moved into a new home and needed help furnishing it.

"There I was, with the big house with big rooms and I had a vague idea of how I wanted it to look, but I needed help pulling it together," she said. Tempesta said a neighbor, who worked part-time as an interior decorator, worked with her.

"It was such a great way to do things. It was a real collaboration. I had definite ideas of what I wanted to do, but she helped me refine them.," said Tempesta, who said she enjoyed the process so much she made a career of it.

"I mostly work with people who have found me through word-of-mouth," said Tempesta, who

Accessible opera

New theater group gears up for a unique holiday production

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Debra Jewell is trying to make opera a more accessible art for people of the South Shore.

To do that, Jewell founded her own theater group "Opera By the Bay" based out of the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham last spring. And while the new group has only performed once, Jewell is fired up about it's holiday season production set for Dec. 16. The opera — "Amahl and the Night Visitors" will be performed at Duxbury's First Parish Church at 4 p.m. and 7:30 p.m.

"It's an opera that was written by Gian Carlo Menotti and it was first performed in 1952," Jewell said. "It is a terrific opera for this time of year because it was written with

All I want for Christmas

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE
CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Is that $165 skillet from All-Clad any good? And, if so, where should I buy it? Where can I find large sheets of heavy-duty parchment paper? Are electric knives any good? Where can I find the best mail-order teas? And what about Tahitian vanilla, bread knives, really good peppercorns, or the world's best digital scale for home cooks? Here is my list of gifts for the cook, all of which have been tested or tasted in our kitchen at Cook's Illustrated magazine during the past year. (For more information, log on to www.cooksillustrated.com.)

COOKWARE AND ACCESSORIES

SAUTÉ PANS

In a recent Cook's test, the All-Clad 3 Quart Sauté Pan (Model 5403) was rated number one, beating out six competitors. It is pricey at $165 but worth the money since it does an excellent job of sautéing, delivering a wonderful brown crust to most foods, and it is roomy, measuring 11 inches in diameter. It also comes with a lid. You can order it at A Cook's Wares by calling 800 915-9788 or logging in at www.cookswares.com.

ELECTRIC KNIVES

Don't laugh-electric knives are back in fashion. They are terrific not only for carving meat and slicing breads but for cutting slices of pecan pie, quesadillas, and delicate cakes and pastries. The winner in our testing was the Black & Decker Ergo Electric Knife (EK600), which retails for $32.99 but can usually be found for around $25 at Wal-Mart, Sears, and Target stores.

LOAF PANS

Well, this may seem more like a stocking stuffer than a real gift, but a good loaf pan is worth its weight in quick bread. Our favorite model was the Ekco Baker's Secret Non-Stick Large Loaf Pan, which sells for a paltry $3.99. (Most other models tested sold for more than $10.) The pan is available at most discount and grocery stores. To find one near you that carries the pan, call World Kitchen at 800-367-3526.

BREAD KNIVES

In the kitchen, as in life, it is the little things that count, and a good bread knife gives the home cook a bit of pleasure every time it is used. The winner in our tests at Cook's was the Forschner, Model 40040, which sells for $36 and did a terrific job with crusty bread, bagels, soft breads, and tomatoes. It has a stiff blade, good length (10 inches), and pointed serrations that tear through crust easily. We also liked the LamsonSharp Offset Bread Knife (Model 39556; $40), although the blade is more flexible than the Forschner0s, making it less well suited to a really heavy loaf but perfect for trimming cakes and the like. The Forschner can be purchased through Kitchen Arts at 617-266-8701, and the LamsonSharp is available at Professional Cutlery Direct; call 800-859-6994 or log on to www.cutlery.com

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 13
Take advantage of relatively mild astrological influences and plan to get a lot accomplished today. Initiate new enterprises before 2:03 p.m., when the Cancer moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. Handle routine chores and errands during the remainder of the afternoon. A playful Leo moon takes over at 9:09 p.m.

THURSDAY, DEC. 14
The combination of a Leo moon and applying Mercury/Uranus alignment makes for an exciting day. Keep an open mind. Follow your intuition. Experiment with new ideas and be willing to try new experiences. Avoid rigid time schedules; be more spontaneous. New beginnings across the board are recommended. You can launch ventures, make decisions, start new activities in your personal or professional life. Influences top the charts for partying this evening.

FRIDAY, DEC. 15
A Leo moon continues to generate an upbeat mood. Get an early start. You can be very productive this morning. There is a rough spot, however, at 2:57 p.m., when the moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive. You may encounter delays or obstacles. Keep it light. Go with the flow. The moon enters practical Virgo at 10:30 p.m.

SATURDAY, DEC. 16
An ambitious Virgo moon affects the weekend and makes it one to get things done. This is not a favorable time for launching important new enterprises, but it is ideal for handling a variety of projects, odds and ends of things, cleaning and reorganizing. A lunar alignment to Pluto may spark emotional thunderstorms this evening. Choose your words carefully. Compliments will work better than criticism.

SUNDAY, DEC. 17
The best way to channel today's planetary influences is to stay busy. Roll up your sleeves and take on a full agenda. You can be most productive. Stress management is important. Don't get caught up in worries, self-doubts, irritability. Look on the bright side of things. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 7:41 p.m., when the Virgo moon becomes inactive. Take extra quiet time out for yourself. Meditate for inner peace.

MONDAY, DEC. 18
The astrological stage is being set for one of the best holiday seasons in many years. Projects should come together smoothly. People will be outgoing, upbeat. The moon enters Libra at 2:01 a.m., forming easy aspects to Jupiter and Neptune in the morning. In addition, a harmonious alignment of the sun and Mars brings an energy boost, extra motivation to get things done. This day is ideal for gift-buying, wrapping, decorating. Plan a romantic evening with the love in your life.

TUESDAY, DEC. 19
The Libra moon continues to form harmonious contacts to planets today. In addition, Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra, forms a flowing 60-degree contact to Pluto. All creative, artistic endeavors are highlighted; express yourself! Partnership and relationship matters may take center stage. This is a time to make commitments to others. New beginnings in your personal life get the green light. The evening is prime for social gatherings, romantic rendezvous.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 20
At 6:07 a.m. the Libra moon becomes inactive until 8:12 a.m., when a Scorpio moon takes over. Rather than starting new activities, this day is best for finishing old business, making repairs or corrections. Influences are favorable for tackling jobs that have been troublesome and finding new solutions. Keep an open mind. A lunar alignment to Neptune is in effect between 3:24-6:24 p.m. and may bring a lull period in the day. Plan a quiet evening. Look within for answers.

THURSDAY, DEC. 21
The Winter Solstice arrives at 8:38 a.m., when the sun enters the sign Capricorn. The moon continues its travel in Scorpio, generating a serious, intense mood. Tackle projects that require mental focus and attention to detail; you can get them out of the way. Put major enterprises or decisions on the back burner until next week. A lunar alignment to Uranus at 6:19 p.m. may disrupt the flow of the day. Slow down. Plan a quiet evening. Prayer and meditation can help you to gain deep, penetrating insights.

FRIDAY, DEC. 22
Wake up in a good mood. The Scorpio moon opposes somber Saturn at 7:28 a.m., when it becomes inactive. Focus on the positives and count your blessings. A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Mars promises a productive morning. Be sure to have a clear plan of action and stick to it. Influences turn around completely at 4:57 p.m., when the moon enters optimistic Sagittarius. The planet Mercury enters Capricorn at 9:03 p.m., remaining there until January 10. A lunar opposition to Jupiter makes this evening prime for partying. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, DEC. 23
A Sagittarius moon continues to generate a festive mood. The planet Mars moves into Scorpio at 9:38 a.m., remaining there until February 14. Influences are prime for handling last-minute holiday preparations, tying up loose ends. A lunar alignment to Pluto at 7:11 p.m. may stir up deep feelings, memories. On the other hand, an alignment of Venus/Uranus makes this an exciting, 'anything can happen' evening. Be more spontaneous; go with your joyful side.

SUNDAY, DEC. 24
At 5:03 a.m. the Sagittarius moon forms its last alignment to a planet and becomes inactive. No major planetary activity occurs thereafter. That means that this is a day to relax, kick back and enjoy. The Sagittarius moon continues to generate an upbeat, optimistic, festive mood. Get in the swing of holiday fun and games.

New movies for cold nights

Hollywood and the independents have a full schedule of seasonal releases

By Ed Symkus
CNC SENIOR ARTS WRITER

Once again, with summer long behind us, we're about to enter the second most popular time of the year to go to movies — that brief period between Thanksgiving and New Year's Day in which Hollywood and the independents, as well as the international filmmaking community, hope their movies will make big enough splashes to earn lots of money and maybe an Oscar nomination or two.

Although release dates are supposedly definite, they're sometimes set in putty rather than cement, so there's no telling if some of these titles may actually be moved into next year, a year that, alas, Stanley Kubrick never got to see (more on that later). But the following is a collection of snippets about what's on the way, in the order they're currently scheduled to be unleashed on the big screen. We start with Dec. 1 and stop at Dec. 31.

The beginning of December gives us some amazing variety, a something-for-everyone kind of release schedule. First up is "Finding Forrester," a little reminiscent of both last year's "The Hurricane" and of J.D. Salinger. It's about a young black kid (Robert Brown) who tracks down his reclusive hero, an author (Sean Connery), over the Internet. Directed by Gus Van Sant and featuring — gulp! —Joey Buttafuoco.

First time director Courtney Solomon goes for big time fantasy with "Dungeons and Dragons," in which bad guy wizard Jeremy Irons tries to overthrow new, beneficent empress Thora Birch. Lots of magic and mazes, and it should be stunningly more visual than the boring board game.

What on earth is the off-camera attraction Russell Crowe sees in Meg Ryan? Maybe that'll be revealed in "Proof of Life," where he's a hostage negotiator trying to save a victim (played by David Morse, not Dennis Quaid) but falls for the guy's wife in the process.

The (mostly) true story of the Marquis de Sade, feverishly played by Geoffrey Rush, is presented in "Quills" — as in pens — Philip Kaufman's depraved tale, that also features Kate Winslet as a not-so-innocent laundress and Michael Caine as a sordid doctor.

When a group of climbers are trapped in a cave on K2, another group of climbers, headed by Chris O'Donnell — whose character had given up climbing under duress — start scaling the mountain to rescue them in "Vertical Limit." A different kind of adventure — one filled with mysticism and romance — is to be found in Ang Lee's newest, "Crouching Tiger, Hidden Dragon." The gorgeously photographed and scored martial arts fantasy stars Chow Yun Fat and Michelle Yeoh.

Yes, people can fly. People can also run ... for their lives, if they're named Lennon, McCartney, Harrison or Starr. "A Hard Day's Night" gets the restored re-issue treatment, still wonderful to watch (in glorious black & white) and hear (the instrumental version of "This Boy").

Mid-December begins with the next installment of Disney animation, this time set in a South American rain forest. "The Emperor's New Groove" has a prince (David Spade) being cursed and turning into a llama, then being befriended by a llama farmer (John Goodman) before what's got to be a happy ending. With music by Sting. Nicolas Cage is a fellow who wakes up one morning to discover he has a wife (Tea Leoni) and some kids in "Family Man." The odd thing is that when he went to sleep he was living the single life. Brett Ratner ("Rush Hour") directs the comedy. In another comedy, Mel Gibson wakes up one day to find that he can read women's minds. An interesting ability for a character that's so chauvinistic, in "What Women Want." Some of the women involved are Helen Hunt, Lauren Holly, and Marisa Tomei.

The latter parts of the month bring us "Thirteen Days," a dramatic background look at the Cuban Missile Crisis and the Kennedys that were involved — President John (Bruce Greenwood) and Attorney General Bobby (Steven Culp). Kevin Costner plays a presidential aide. There's no doubt that the folks who made "Cast Away" are hoping the American public is still high on "Survivor" fever. Tom Hanks makes it through a plane crash but ends up alone on an island. It's the newest film from director Robert Zemeckis, who this time goes for character development over effects.

Tough, strait-laced, by-the-book FBI Agent Sandra Bullock must, very much against her will, go undercover in the Miss United States pageant to thwart a terrorist plot in "Miss Congeniality." William Shatner is one of many costars.

The Dracula legend gets another outing in "Wes Craven Presents: Dracula 2000." The story is a contemporary one, set in America, starring Gerard Butler as the Count and Christopher Plummer as Dr. Van Helsing. Note: Craven is executive producing; editor Patrick Lussier is directing.

Katie Holmes goes missing, and psychic Cate Blanchett tries to find her in Sam Raimi's new thriller "The Gift." Keanu Reeves gets to play another bad guy; Hillary Swank costars. Co-written by Billy Bob Thornton. The Coen Brothers give the nod to both Homer's "Odyssey" and Preston Sturges' "Sullivan's Travels" in their new comedy-musical "Oh Brother, Where Art Thou?," the story of three escapees from a southern chain gang in the 1930s. George Clooney, John Turturro, and Tim Blake Nelson star. David Mamet writes and directs a poke at the movie industry when a cast and crew set up shop in a little Vermont town and bring Hollywood-style turmoil with them in "State and Maine." The eclectic cast features William H. Macy, Alec Baldwin, Sarah Jessica Parker, Philip Seymour Hoffman, and Ricky Jay.

Meg Ryan and Russell Crowe are on the run from danger in "Proof of Life."

The year wraps up with — believe it or not — only two films opening on Christmas Day. First is the Billy Bob Thornton-directed "All the Pretty Horses," based on the Cormac McCarthy novel about a cowboy (Matt Damon) who crosses the Mexican border in the 1930s, and falls in love with a landowner's daughter (Penelope Cruz). And then there's Barry Levinson's Irish comedy "An Everlasting Piece," about a couple of Belfast barbers — each on different sides of the religion wars — who get together to sell wigs.

Back to Stanley Kubrick. The year ends with a big bang of music from Richard Strauss, an effects-filled blast through the cosmos, and a few gorillas in the perfectly timed re-release of "2001: A Space Odyssey." The film will be completely restored, but don't look for any new footage. And even though there aren't many overwhelming Cinerama screens left, this is sure to show up on the biggest screens of your local multiplex.

Scituate woman has a passion for penmanship

During her years in Halifax, Page was working on her own project — she wanted to get more involved with teaching penmanship, based on certain factors at the elementary school.

"I had so many questions from the kids concerning how they should go about learning how to write," she said. "My interest in the subject was created from my personal involvement."

Page started conducting handwriting classes out of her home for adults. She later started creating penmanship courses at high schools in Norwell, Braintree, Stoughton, and even at local colleges.

In 1988, she started Page Enterprises, which kept her very involved with the subject she was passionate about. In 1993, she went back to college at UMass-Boston and got her master's degree. And in 1996, she decided that concentrating on her own business was what she wanted to do full time.

"I left Halifax Elementary School in 1996," she said. She found herself with plenty of extra time on her hands so Page kept to the task of writing books and continued to teach the courses from her home. Page said all of her work is well worth it, because penmanship is something that still matters despite the fact that computers dominate the writing world.

"Quite frankly, I think handwriting is having a comeback," she said. "It's not as obsolete as people think. People need good penmanship to fill out applications and even to get certified as a teacher. Kids need penmanship skills to do well on their MCAS tests and also to submit hand-written writing samples to college."

Page noted there are handwriting problems which even exist in the professional world, as she noted "some doctors are being sent back to penmanship school." Page explained instances have arisen in various hospitals in which patients get the wrong prescription because of a given doctor's messy handwriting.

"It just goes to show that people everywhere need those kinds of handwriting skills," she added. "And besides, people should have a personal investment in their penmanship. Good penmanship means getting the message across, and people can feel good about communicating well. It builds self-esteem."

Page said she is enjoying life to the fullest. She moved to Scituate in 1998, and since then, she has been concentrating on Page Enterprises to the fullest.

"A lot of my business is teaching now," she said, noting she would like to be a full-time college professor. She added she has been teaching "in service" college courses at local universities, but those classes are not for undergraduates. She also brings her classes to local businesses, and other local organizations who request her presence. She said she also still manages to do things like handwriting analysis as well.

"If I want to know someone's strengths and weaknesses, all I have to do is look at their handwriting," she said. But Page dispelled some of the myths about handwriting appearance.

"You can't tell age, you can't tell gender, and you can't tell the future," she quipped.

You can't give what you don't have

By Anthony Summers
CORRESPONDENT

The Rettbergs and the Henrys had been neighbors for more than half a century. Over the years they had exchanged small courtesies, borrowed cups of flour and waved hello to each other as William Henry occasionally hauled firewood on the cart path which traversed the Rettbergs' 18-acre cornfield. Well, the times they were a changin' and neighborly feelings evaporated in 1995 when the Rettbergs commenced the Land Court action entitled Rettberg vs. Henry and Huxley.

Background

1. August and Virginia Rettberg, the plaintiffs, had resided on Clark Road in Shirley since 1939. They also owned an 18-acre cornfield directly across from their home, on the other side of Clark Road.

2. The Henrys had lived on Clark Road since 1929, next door to the Rettbergs.

3. In addition to their house lot, the Henrys also owned a wood lot located across Clark Road and on the far side of the Rettbergs' cornfield.

4. Between 1936 and 1939, the Henrys were allowed to access their wood lot by crossing over the path which ran across the Rettbergs' cornfield.

5. Subsequent to 1939 and up through the early 1950s, the Henrys did not live at the Clark Road home on a continual basis, and consequently, did not have occasion to use the Rettbergs' cart path on a regular schedule.

6. To further demonstrate the Henrys' inconsistent use of the wood lot, and hence the cart path, Joseph Howlett, a neighbor, began using the Henrys' wood lot in 1946 for grazing ponies. In fact, he paid the wood lot property taxes from 1946 to 1985.

7. Between 1940 and 1988, there was no credible evidence that the Henrys used the path on a continuous, consistent basis.

8. Frequently, the path was obscured because of the corn and other crops farmed by the Rettbergs.

9. In 1988, Richard Henry, a second generation owner, multiplied his use of the path to such an extent that the path became a wider road with tire marks.

10. Alarmed by the change in the path, the Rettbergs filed a notice to prevent easement pursuant to MGL c187, s3.

11. The daily use of the path continued unabated, and finally, in 1995, the Rettbergs commenced a Land Court action pursuant to MGL ch 185, s1, to register title to the cornfield, and establish that the Henrys had not acquired any rights to use the path.

12. The Henrys' response was that they had acquired an easement both by prescription and express grant. Apparently, the deed from William Henry's estate to Richard Henry included an easement over the path.

Discussion of law

"A prescriptive easement may be established by showing one's use of another's land in a manner that is open, notorious, adverse and continuous for a period of at least 20 years." Even though the use may be infrequent, it must follow a pattern of regularity, such as weekends, annual haying, or summer vacation.

Anthony Summers

Decision

It looks as though the Henrys will have to take the long way around. The use of the path was not continuous as required by adverse possession law, but sporadic at best. Even though the Henrys established that they used the path from 1936 to 1988, the use was irregular and did not follow a consistent pattern.

Also, the Henrys failed to prove that their use of the path was adverse. In fact, the evidence indicated that the Rettbergs permitted the use of the path as a shortcut. The evidence also suggested that the Rettbergs only objected to use of the path in 1988, when Richard Henry began using the path on a daily basis.

The decision might very well have come down in favor of the Henrys if they could have established regular use of the path.

Although Robert Frost never intended to comment on adverse possession law, he was unintentionally prescient when he wrote "two [paths] converged in a wood, and I, I took the one less traveled, and that has made all the difference."

In this case, the fact that the path was "less traveled" was pivotal in deciding any right under a theory of adverse possession.

Finally, there was no way the Henrys could have acquired an easement by the express grant contained in the senior William Henry's deed, since he never possessed an easement in the first place. You cannot create in yourself an easement over another's land. Since he was never granted an easement, there was no way his estate could grant an easement in the deed to his heir.

As that Latin legal maxim provides, "Nemo dat quod non habet," or, you cannot give what you do not have.

Legal advice

It is not uncommon for one neighbor to use another's land, with permission of course. If you're concerned that your next door neighbor using your land, with your permission, may be in fact acquiring title by adverse possession, Mass Law, Chapt. 187 s3, allows you to take steps to short circuit the adverse possession time clock by serving a notice on the adverse possessor [neighbor] and recording the notice in the registry of deeds.

charges an hourly fee but said she often gets discounts on home accessories or furnishings for the people she works with.

"It evens out. Often what I charge I can make up for with professional discounts on things. People think they can't afford interior designers, but that's not always true," she said.

Rick Botieri of Cliffside Design in Plymouth said a good designer can actually save their client money. "People think interior designers and they think, 'ka-ching,'" said Botieri.

"But one of the things a designer does is budget you. We shop in any price range. If you have a small budget, we do it in stages, so you have a plan for over the next three or five or ten years. But we can tell you where your first money is better spent," he said.

Botieri, who noted people are using interior designers more than ever before, said that if you're contemplating using an interior designer, it's worth taking the time to meet with one or two.

"Your home is your biggest investment. It's worth taking a half-hour to talk with an designer about how it can look," said Botieri, who does not charge for a preliminary consultation.

After working with a client over the course of a couple of weeks, choosing fabrics, paint colors, wall papers and accessories, Botieri's firm comes up with a "vignette" for a room. Half of the fee Botieri charges for his services can be credited back through purchases made.

"If nothing else, you've walked out with a designed room and a list of accessories for it. It's a shopping list that you can work from," said Botieri, whose firm handles jobs of every size, from window treatments to whole houses.

Botieri said the most important thing is that designer and client communicate.

"We have to work well together. I have to know your personality, how you live and entertain, if your kids will jump on the furniture, if you have pets in and out of the house all day. Your home has to fit your personality, not the designers," he said.

To choose an interior decorator, most in the field agree that word-of-mouth is the best way. "I get nearly all of my clients that way. They have seen my work and like it in their friends' homes, and we can go from there," said Tempesta.

Botieri said that in addition to talking to friends and neighbors, go to show homes when they are open, look through magazines for local designers and interview a couple of designers before making a final decision.

"It's important that you really get along with the designer and that they be very hands-on, if that's what the client wants," he said.

Botieri said that in the 15 years he's been in the business here, he's seen homeowners loosen up a little, which had made his job a lot more fun.

"People aren't so concerned anymore about making sure their end tables and lamps match perfectly. People are letting their homes become an extension of their personalities a lot more," he said.

Avoid 6 Costly Errors When Moving to a Larger Home and Save Thousands

A new report has just been released which identifies the 6 most common and costly mistakes that homebuyers make when moving to a larger home.

Unlike the experience of buying a first home, when you're looking to move-up, and already own a home, there are certain factors that can complicate the situation. It's very important for you to understand these issues before you list your home for sale.

Not only is there the issue of financing to consider, but you also have to sell your present home at exactly the right time in order to avoid either the financial burden of owning two homes or, just as bad, the dilemma of having no place to live during the gap between closings.

In answer to this issue, industry insiders have prepared a free special report entitled "6 Inside Strategies to Avoid Trade-Up Mistakes."

These six strategies will help you make informed choices before you put your home on the market in anticipation of moving to a larger home.

To hear a brief recorded message about how to order your FREE copy of this report, call 1-800-581-1081 and enter ID#12089. You can call anytime, 24 hours a day, 7 days a week.

Call NOW to find out what you need to know to make your move up to a larger home worry-free and without complications.

Deck the halls with fresh greens and holiday plants

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

'Tis the season for holiday shopping, baking and decorating. With the ground frozen and blanketed with a dusting of snow, my thoughts turn from trimming the garden to trimming my home for the holidays. Although much work remains to be done around the yard, those tasks are best left for warmer days once the holiday rush has passed.

As I travel from mall to mall and go about my daily errands, one eye is on the road while the other is scanning the roadside in search of natural materials to use for my decorating. In the next few days, I will begin the process of gathering greens, colorful berries and dried weeds and pods to create my holiday decorations, having made innumerable mental notes of prime collecting areas around the South Shore.

Although I would never be so bold as to clip someone's shrubbery, weeds or greens growing on vacant lots or in open fields may be the beneficiary of a little selective pruning. Stunning stands of winterberry, wild rose hips, and cedars covered with a profusion of icy blue berries are high on my priority list. Queen Anne's Lace, milkweed pods and decorative branches may be gathered, sprayed gold, silver or white and sprinkled with glitter, while tacky, to add a little sparkle to holiday decorations. White pine, cedar, ground pine, mountain laurel and junipers provide excellent evergreen foliage for wreaths, garlands, swags and arrangements both indoors and out as they last through the holidays and into the new year, even without water. A pair of pruning shears is always under the seat of my car so that I may perform my civic duty by pruning neglected roadside plantings.

Green thumbs up

A mature landscape can offer a wealth of materials suitable for holiday decorating. Thoughtful plantings of evergreen trees and shrubs which provide winter beauty serve as excellent cut foliage for floral design and decorations. Yews, arborvitae, junipers, false cypress (Chamaecyparis), spruce, Japanese holly and blue holly give wonderful textural contrast to both landscapes and holiday greenery. Avoid hemlock as it tends to drop its small needles shortly after being cut, especially if used indoors. Creeping euonymus, PJM rhododendron and leucothoe foliage offer additional broadleaf contrast to needled evergreens and are often tinted pink, bronze or gold during the winter months. I delay the pruning of most of these evergreens until this month and fill several bags full of clippings ideal for my holiday trimmings.

Among the easiest and most attractive solutions for decorating during this hectic season is to purchase a collection of holiday plants. A strategically placed poinsettia can provide instant color to brighten even the darkest room, creating a handsome focal point or decorative element which brings warmth and vitality to any living space.

December is not the ideal time, however, to acquire house plants. Cold outdoor temperatures and dry indoor environments pose serious challenges for all plants and certain precautions should be taken to ensure their survival. If at all possible, acquire plants on days when temperatures are above

HUD-approved seminar for first-time buyers

Conway Financial Services and Neighborhood Housing Services collaborated to sponsor a workshop recently for first-time buyers.

About 50 people learned the best ways to begin their search for a home, shop for a mortgage and utilize loan and grant programs offered by municipalities and non-profit groups.

Debbie Kidd of Quincy-based NHS moderated the all-day seminar, which featured presentations by mortgage originators, attorneys and real estate professionals from Jack Conway Real Estate. Each participant was offered the chance to meet one-on-one with each of the instructors.

The workshop was held at Conway's Hanover education center. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development approved the curriculum, making participants eligible for a variety of buyer-assistance programs.

Conway Financial Service is the mortgage-brokerage arm of the Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co. real estate firm.

children in mind. And it's only about one-hour long."

Jewell added although the opera was originally written in Italian, the Opera By The Bay translated the production into English.

Jewell, a trained singer herself, and the designated director of her theater group's productions, said the upcoming show will feature a cast of "six principle singers" and a chorus comprised of 15-20 people from all regions of the South Shore. There will not be an orchestra playing with the production, but rather, just one single piano.

"Amahl's simple story about the power of love and giving will offer a welcome interlude for families. It's really a beautiful story, and it's written through a child's eyes. It's about the power of love between a mother and a child, and it's got a magical, powerful ending. The best thing about it is that children will be able to understand it and enjoy it to the fullest."

Debra Jewell, founder of Opera By The Bay

"We're trying to keep it simple," Jewell said. "One of the reasons people have always considered opera inaccessible is because it's so grand. This production sounds beautiful, almost magical when it's done with just one piano."

Jewell said the story within "Amahl and the Night Visitors" is one which will appeal to everyone's sense of holiday spirit.

"It's the story of a little boy named Amahl who happens to be crippled," Jewell explained. "During the story, the first turning point comes when the three kings stop at Amahl's house on their way to Bethlehem."

The opera opens with Amahl playing his pipe outside his hut. When his mother yells for him to come inside, he tells her that he sees an "unlikely comet" in the sky. It soon becomes apparent in the show that the comet is a star guiding the procession of three kings who are bearing gifts for a child they have only heard about.

"Amahl's simple story about the power of love and giving will offer a welcome interlude for families," Jewell said. "It's really a beautiful story, and it's written through a child's eyes. It's about the power of love between a mother and a child, and it's got a magical, powerful ending. The best thing about it is that children will be able to understand it and enjoy it to the fullest."

While she's enjoying her role directing her opera troupe, it's not something Jewell, 42, had planned on. For years she said she had aspirations of becoming a rock star.

"I wanted to sing rock and folk songs when I was younger," Jewell said. "But when I got to college, that's not the direction my voice went."

After she graduated from Duxbury High School, Jewell went to Westminster College in Pennsylvania where she earned a degree in music education. After she graduated, Jewell moving around with her husband Bob. She traveled around, singing with various theater groups and living in different kinds of areas.

Jewell said some of the areas she and her husband lived included Arizona, New York, Connecticut, Rhode Island, and even England. Along the way, Jewell and her husband had two kids, Molly, 13, and Billy, 7.

"We traveled around for 20 years," Jewell said, "and then we decided to come back to Duxbury last year."

When she got back to Duxbury, Jewell got right to the task of starting an opera troupe, given her talent for singing and her overall knack of musical production.

"I went right over to the South Shore Conservatory," she said, "which is basically a school of music, art, and dance. I talked to the director Jim Simpson about the possibility of having an opera troupe based out of there. He said yes, and now, here we are."

Jewell said the Opera By The Bay doesn't have a permanent stage for performances. She said for the time being, different stages around the area will be used. Like the venues they play, the performers in the opera troupe are always changing, Jewell said. There are no actors who are a permanent fixture because she wants to keep working with different people from around the area.

"One of my goals is to educate the community about opera, and show younger people how child-friendly opera can actually be. I want to make the art of opera something that's accessible, not elitist."

Debra Jewell, founder of Opera By The Bay

"This is basically a small company and I'm just going to see what it grows into," Jewell said. "I've been a singer my whole life and I've sand with many (theater) companies around the country, and it's always the smaller ones that I enjoyed being part of the most."

Jewell said producing quality operas is her main objective with her Opera By The Bay, but she said she has other goals as well.

"First, I want to give young singers a chance to try out some opera material and I also want to give more experienced singers the same chance," she said. "But one of my goals is to educate the community about opera, and show younger people how child-friendly opera can actually be. I want to make the art of opera something that's accessible, not elitist."

For more information on tickets to "Amahl and the Night Visitors," or for questions about the Opera By The Bay, call (781) 934-2731. Tickets cost $10 for general admission and $5 for seniors. They are available in advance at the Ellison Center for the Arts in Duxbury, the Westwinds Bookshop, also in Duxbury, or The South Shore Conservatory.

1-way air trips

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

George Hobica

Q. Why is the price of a one-way air ticket more expensive than a round-trip airline ticket?

A. Basically, so the airlines can make more money. However, many airlines don't penalize travelers for making one-way trips. AirTran, Pan Am, Jet Blue, and Shuttle America, for example, always sell their one-way tickets for half the lowest round-trip fare. Other airlines, such as ATA and Southwest, often have good deals for one-way travel if not exactly half the round-trip fare.

Sometimes, ironically, it's cheaper to buy a round-trip ticket and throw away the return portion rather than buying a one-way fare.

Q. I am hoping to take my children to New York City over the Martin Luther King weekend in January. This is their first time to NYC, and I am going to try to cram in as much as I can. Where do you recommend we stay?

Also, do you know the name of the deli that has pickles on the table — or what deli would you recommend?

A. With rates starting at just $89 plus tax in January, including continental breakfast, Apple Core Hotels is a good choice. The hotels offer such conveniences as on-site fitness and business centers, in-room hair dryers, coffee makers, irons and ironing boards, telephones with dataport and voice mail, cable television with on-demand movies and video games. Additionally, children under 13 stay free when sharing their parents' room, making a large room with two double beds, or a suite, an economical choice for families. Rates for larger rooms start at just $99.

Locations include the new Red Roof Inn Manhattan (6 West 32nd St.), Comfort Inn Midtown (129 W. 46th St.), Quality Hotel & Suites Midtown (59 W. 46th St., the Best Western Manhattan (17 W. 32nd St.) and the Quality Hotel East Side (161 Lexington Ave.). Contact Apple Core Hotels at (800) 567-7720 or visit www.applecorehotels.com.

As for the deli, you're probably thinking of the Carnegie Deli, 854 Seventh Ave. (55th Street), New York, (212) 757-2245.

Q. Can you explain the rules about being bumped from a flight? What kind of compensation should I be offered if this happens to me?

A. If you are bumped and the airline can't reroute you on its next departing flight or on another airline within a set period of time, you should be offered a cash settlement. If the airline gets you to your destination within an hour of schedule, no compensation is due.

But, if you'll be more than two hours late (four hours for international flights), or the airline cannot make another flight available, and you're a confirmed passenger, then you're entitled to a cash refund of 200 percent of the fare, up to a maximum of $400.

Q. Can you please print (or reprint in case I missed it) the U.S. government phone numbers and addresses to write a complaint letter concerning airline service? I've already complained to the airline in question but have gotten nowhere.

A. Call the Federal Aviation Administration at (202) 366-2220 or (800) 322-7873 or write:

Aviation Consumer Protection Division, U.S. Department of Transportation, Room 4107, C-75, Washington, DC 20590. Send a copy to your airline, too.

Another avenue is to visit a cool Web site at Passenger Rights.com where you can file a complaint and also read horror stories about other travelers' experiences. Some of them are so atrocious you'll probably end up feeling better about your own tale of woe.

freezing. Be sure the plant is wrapped in a paper or plastic sleeve or bag to protect it from the cold, even when the temperatures are above freezing because a sudden, dramatic change in temperature can severely shock the plant causing nearly immediate leaf or flower drop. On very cold days, be sure the car is warmed up in advance of your purchase and make it your last stop so the plant does not sit in an unheated car while you run other errands.

Most holiday plants prefer bright light and cool temperatures. Select a location out of the sun and away from drafts or heat sources. Avoid growing plants on windowsills in winter due to the chill of the glass on very cold days. Even a plant given ideal growing conditions is likely to drop a few leaves as it adjusts to its new environment.

Perhaps the most common cause for houseplant failures is improper watering. Most holiday plants prefer to dry out between waterings. Water early in the day with lukewarm water, providing enough water so that some comes out through the drainage holes in the bottom of the container. Although decorative foliage dresses up an ordinary plastic pot, it is better to remove this covering so water can drain into a saucer and the excess can be poured off shortly after watering. Plants require less moisture during extended periods of cloudy, gloomy weather. Avoid the temptation to water plants on a weekly schedule to prevent over-watering, the most common cause of houseplant failures. If the soil surface feels moist to the touch, delay watering.

Bathrooms are an ideal location for holiday plants. Guests usually visit them at some point during their stay and the humidity that results from showers and running water is extremely beneficial. My bathroom poinsettias usually thrive until spring while those in other rooms of the house have been discarded weeks before.

Apply a diluted liquid fertilizer every other week or use a slow release fertilizer like Osmocote which requires only one application to the soil surface with the nutrients released to the plant each time water is given. Deck the halls with holiday plants for a cheerful, colorful, Yuletide display.

Electoral College is bittersweet event

Cohasset selectman casts vote for Gore

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

On Monday, the House chamber wasn't filled with legislators, aides and clerks. It was filled with children, wives and parents.

They came out to cheer their family and friends — who were serving as Electors for the state Democratic Party — as they cast their votes for Vice President Al Gore.

"It was just a great honor to be able to represent the state."
— Fred Koed, Cohasset

Though most Americans are now well versed in punch-card ballots, vote-count procedure, and constitutional election law, some may not realize when they cast their ballots on Election Day, they are actually voting for the state's 12-member Electoral College that helps determine the nation's next president.

Four days after Vice-President Al Gore finally conceded that he had lost the election to Texas Governor George W. Bush, members of the Electoral College gathered in the 50 states, plus the District of Columbia, to confirm what everyone already knew – Bush will be the Leader of the Free World for the next four years.

But that didn't stop Pembroke's Stephen Driscoll, Weymouth's Margaret MacKenzie and Cohasset's Fred Koed from proudly casting their votes for Albert K. Gore Jr. of Tennessee.

"It's really a bittersweet day for me," said Driscoll. "There was a lot of pomp but unfortunately for me, not enough circumstance, as I was hoping I'd be casting my vote for the winning candidate."

Driscoll and the other two South Shore residents were elected by their Democratic Party peers to be part of Massachusetts' slate of electors. In Massachusetts, each party with a presidential candidate names a slate of 12 people to be electors who are called into service if their party wins the state's popular vote. On Election Day, no recounts were needed in Massachusetts as more than 60 percent of the state cast ballots for Gore.

As the U.S. Constitution dictates, the Electoral College meets on the first Monday after the second Tuesday around the nation.

At the State House, Secretary of State William Galvin began the proceedings auspiciously by pounding the gavel so hard the head snapped off. Moments later, six tuxedo-clad men and six women in evening gowns were led into the House chamber by the sergeant-at-arms to rousing cheers from those in attendance, including Democratic Party Chairman Phil Johnston and state representative Frank Hynes, both of

Selectmen adopt new conditions for town-issued licenses

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Selectmen adopted five new license conditions Tuesday night, in an effort to create more "uniform" restrictions on all license holders.

The issue came up after the Red Lion Inn had nearly two pages of conditions attached to its liquor and entertainment license earlier this year, including restrictions on sound, outdoor dining, and hours of operation. Selectman Ronnie McMorris recently suggested applying some of the same conditions to the other town businesses to maintain a level of fairness.

Of the five approved, only three will affect every license holder in town. The others will affect holders of entertainment and liquor licenses. The conditions passed with a 3-1 majority vote; Selectman Merle Brown, though he said he could vote for four of the conditions, refused to vote for the fifth which requires businesses to monitor where their patrons park, and make sure they don't impede traffic. Selectman Mike Sullivan did not attend Tuesday's meeting.

"We don't have the spaces," Brown protested. He said it is unfair to the businesses to address parking problems when there isn't anywhere for cars to park.

But Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan said the town needs some way to force businesses to police themselves. He cited

Fields sacrificed for school construction

Scheduling nightmare looms

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The upcoming school expansion and renovation projects will add two other casualties to its growing list that already includes the auditorium, library, Dorr Gymnasium at the middle/high school and side parking lot at the Deer Hill School.

As of this spring, both Lillard Field, behind the middle/high school and the field in the front of the school will be missing in action during the majority of the three-year project.

According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, the front field will become the staging area for the middle/high school project, and Lillard Field will be cut into to make way for the new gymnasium and athletic center. Though the fields are being sacrificed in the name of long-term benefits, close to 1,000 town athletes will feel the space pinch in the short-term.

Recreation Committee Chairman Jack Worley said though the town will try to "accommodate every group as best as possible," this year's annual gathering of the various town athletic groups — to hammer out a field use schedule for the remaining five fields — will be an exercise in diplomacy.

"We've always had field problems in Cohasset, so we're used to a finite schedule. We're trying to accommodate all the different teams."
— Jack Worley, recreation director

"We've always had field problems in Cohasset," Worley said, "so we're used to a finite schedule. We're trying to accommodate all the different teams."

Worley and Haddad expect the fall and spring to pose the most scheduling conflicts, as more than 700 town soccer players will vie for

Officials speak out on homelessness

The last in a series of articles focusing on homelessness on the South Shore

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Anybody could become homeless in the blink of an eye.

The people featured in this year's Gifts of Hope series never expected to be in the situations they are today, but certain instances transpired in their lives through which they were all left without homes to call their own.

Sean and Shelley Kylie and their eight-month-old daughter thought they had it made — one minute they were happy living in Shelley's mother's Braintree home, and the next minute they were being evicted because they had no idea Shelley's mother was not paying her part of the rent. Now the couple and their baby are homeless, living in an upstairs room at the Unitarian Parish House in Cohasset.

Stacey Hawthorne now resides at the Carolina Hill shelter in Marshfield, and she would be the first one to say she never thought it would happen to her. But circumstances involving a violent ex-boyfriend kept her from being able to rent a place of her own peacefully, and now she has no place to go.

Paul Tyler lives at Father Bill's Place, a homeless shelter in Quincy, but he said the facility is like the "Ritz Carleton" compared to where he lived before — outside on Boston Common. Tyler said he became homeless because drugs led him down the wrong path, and he ended up with nothing.

"There has been a dramatic increase in the number of families and individuals who have become homeless over the past few years," said Leslie Lawrence, assistant director of the

Recycling grant

After many months of hard work by Selectmen Merle Brown and the Recycling Committee, the town received a $17,677 state grant for recycling programs in town.

The money will be used for buying new transfer station signs and consumer education manuals. It will also provide pricing assistance for dumping at the RTF.

TV controls

Months after the rest of the selectmen's office was renovated, AT&T Broadband finally came through with new camera equipment for televising meetings.

As part of the town's cable contract with AT&T, the company had promised to install $10,000 worth of new equipment to provide better quality coverage of the meetings.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said AT&T came in over the weekend and installed two new cameras, sounds system and control panel, with the aid of Town Hall custodian Joe Cochran.

Haddad, who now also serves as production coordinator, is able to switch between cameras, one of which faces the audience, the other the selectmen, raise and lower microphone sound levels, and zoom in and out. He jokingly threatened to shut off selectman Merle Brown's microphone a couple of times during Tuesday night's meeting.

One downside to the new system is that the new microphones are "very sensitive," said Haddad. Before the meeting, a new microphone in the audience was able to pick up casual conversation on the fringe of the crowd.

"People wanted to hear us, and they will," said Haddad.

Selectmen urge residents to call the office with any comments on the new system.

Border Street bridge update

A recent survey of the Border Street bridge said it was structurally sound enough to not warrant a weight limit.

"It's not going to fall in," joked Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Committee updates

Clark Brewer, Michael Westcott, Rick Swanborg and Jim Shipsky were all named to the Growth and Development Task Force. Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan, the liaison to the committee, said one more citizen's position is open.

Selectmen, on the urging of Historical Committee Chairman Noel Ripley, named John Connell of James way to the committee. Ripley also said two vacancies remain.

Interested citizens should call the selectmen's office at 383-4105.

Town Meeting deadline

The warrant for the 2001 annual Town Meeting is now open, and will remain so until Thursday, Jan. 18 at 4:30 p.m. The deadline for citizens' petitions is Friday, Jan. 12 at 1 p.m. Anyone looking to submit a citizens' petition, but unsure how to, is urged to contact the selectmen's office at 383-4105. Petitions must be accompanied by signatures from 10 registered voters.

Town Meeting will be Saturday, March 31.

Town Election

Nomination papers for the annual town election will be available on Monday, Jan. 8 at the Town Clerk's Office. In order to hold elected office, you must be a registered voter of the town. The following positions will be up for grabs:

Selectmen – two for three years

School Committee — two for three years

Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library – three for three years

Assessor – one for three years

Board of Health – one for three years

Cohasset Housing Authority – one for five years

Planning Board – one for five years

Recreation Commission – one for five years

Sewer Commission – one for three years

Water Commission – one for three years, one for one year to fill an unexpired term

Nomination papers must be submitted to the Board of Registrars by Feb. 15. Town elections will be held on Saturday, April 7.

Water Commission

A joint meeting of the Cohasset Water Commission and Board of Selectmen named Glenn Pratt to replace Chip Muncey as water commissioner, effective January 2.

Muncey announced his resignation last month, saying he can't afford to live in town anymore. Pratt will serve until the April town elections, where he will have to run to serve for the remainder of Muncey's term which expires in 2002.

Selectmen Merle Brown originally cast doubts about appointing someone to serve for just three months, but water commissioner John McNabb said a full-slate of activity over the next three months makes it necessary.

"We're going to be very busy. We need the extra hand," he told the board. McNabb said the commission will look at bids to replace a number of fire hydrants in town, review the town's contract with Massachusetts-American Water Company, and other system work. "Having someone will be very helpful," he said.

Former water commissioner, now selectman, Fred Koed agreed with McNabb. "I think it's very important to have a full board," he said. "We have a very well qualified candidate who is willing to give up his time and I am confident he will be able to get up to speed quickly."

Selectman Ronnie McMorris agreed with Koed, calling it "wonderful" that Pratt was willing to step forward and take the job on.

Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan expressed some concern over Pratt's involvement with the Wolf Pits In Beechwood. Pratt recently sold land near part of the town's tributary system, and Callahan was concerned Pratt would have a conflict of interest when dealing with issues involving that property.

McNabb said Pratt would recuse himself from any discussion involving the property.

The nomination was approved unanimously.

New tank to come on line

The Cohasset Water Commission ceremonially "turned on" the new Scituate Hill Water Storage Tank at a ribbon-cutting ceremony Saturday, Dec. 16.

"The completion of this new tank, at a cost of about $1,600,000 is the most significant new construction in the Cohasset water system since the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant was constructed in 1978," said Water Commission Chairman John McNabb.

"The Scituate Hill Water Storage Tank will provide a significant benefit to our water consumers."

— John K. McNabb, Jr., water commission chairman

Turning on the new water tank are from left, Ben Curley, former superintendent of the water department; Edwin Pratt, former water dept. superintendent; John McNabb, chairman of the water commission; water commissioner Robert Kasameyer; out-going water commissioner Chip Muncey; selectman and former water commissioner Fred Koed and new water commissioner Glenn Pratt.

"This new tank is completed," said McNabb, "and is ready to be turned on. The Scituate Hill Water Storage Tank will provide a significant benefit to our water consumers, since in addition to providing essential fire fighting water reserve for the town, the new tank will allow us to clean out and repaint the Bear Hill tank and then to flush the water distribution system — improving the taste and odor of the water for all of our customers. "

"The year 2000 has also be one of our busiest construction years ever," said McNabb, "in addition to the new tank our completed Year 2000 projects have included:

• replacing pipes on King Street, Schofield Road, Lily Pond Lane, Black Horse Lane, Holly Lane, Stevens Lane, Highland Court, Robert Jason Road, and Highland Ave.

• beginning to reactivate the Ellms Meadow wellfields,

• updating our long-range distribution system capital improvements plan;

• developing a long-range capital improvements plan for the treatment plant;

• beginning to develop a long-range water supply protection plan; and many repairs to the treatment plant,

"The Water Department plans to continue its ongoing system improvements program in 2001," said McNabb, "with many projects, including the following:"

• Drain, clean, inspect and repair Bear Hill Water Storage Tank

• Flush entire water distribution system (at least once).

• Clean & line Beechwood Street (Rt. 3A - Riverview Drive), Elm Street, and Summer Street.

• Replace 900 feet of 6" pipe on Border Street with 10" pipe.

• Improve fire flows on Rustic Drive by either (a) Looping Linden Drive with Forest Ave, or (b) replacing 6" pipe on Rustic Drive with 8" pipe.

• Replace 10 fire hydrants, including installation of new valves & gates.

• Replace 10 valves & gates.

• Completing reactivation of the Ellms Meadow Wellfield

• Starting reactivation of the Sohier Street Wellfield

Board of Health to look at mercury ban, tattoo regulations

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The Cohasset Board of Health decided to look closely at a proposed citizens petition that would ban the sale and importation of mercury thermometers in Cohasset, saying it could adversely impact doctors, nursing homes and the schools.

The petition, spurred by water commissioner John McNabb, was submitted after the City of Boston passed a similar ban, and representatives from the Department of Environmental Protection urged every town and city in Massachusetts to do the same. McNabb said the mercury found in two thermometers could contaminate every fish in Lily Pond.

Health Board Chairman Stephen Bobo said for the most part he is for the ban because "no one knows what to do with it," when it comes to disposal. He said whenever he asks what to do with it he gets "all these crazy answers." He said one woman told him she used to bury it in her backyard which is "exactly the wrong thing to do."

The ban would prevent stores from selling standard thermometers, and force people to switch to digital ones, but would not make it illegal to own one. However, if one was to break, or everyone switched to digital, the question would still remain what to do with the mercury. Board member Peggy Chapman urged the town to collect mercury twice a year, or have it collected as part of hazardous waste days at the transfer station.

Though the board was generally in favor of the ban, it got hung up on the "importation" aspect of the proposed bylaw. According to member Robin Lawrence, nursing homes, doctor's offices and science classes still use mercury thermometers. Chapman also questioned what would happen to mercury blood pressure cuffs in medical offices, and mercury switches in home heating thermostats.

"It's going to happen somewhere."

— Dr. Joseph Godzik about tattoo parlors

Bobo said when houses are destroyed, all the construction debris is brought to an incinerator in Rochester and burned, but the burning just releases the mercury back into the atmosphere. "Thermometers are just a small part of the problem," Bobo said. He suggested public education about proper disposal of mercury.

Chapman argued that the ban would be step in the right direction. "It is a big deal because there are so many of them," she said. "Let's just start with the thermometers."

Body artists

The board also said it will start coming up with regulations concerning body artists. A recent Massachusetts Supreme Court ruling overturned a state law banning tattoo artists from practicing in the state. There currently is an injunction preventing the law from being overturned, until the state is able to come up with a set of guidelines for local health boards to draft their own regulations by. The injunction is scheduled to be lifted Jan. 31, 2001.

"This is just in case," health agent Joseph Godzik said about establishing a set of regulations. Though no one has started looking at store-front space in Cohasset yet, Godzik warned the board not to think body artists won't set up shop in town. "It's going to happen somewhere," he said.

The state regulation guidelines are expected to be released in January, and Godzik said towns have fairly wide leeway in creating their own regulations. "Some of the things you want to do is to discourage them from practicing," he said. "You need to be stringent without infringing on people's rights."

Interestingly, said Godzik, tattoo associations want regulations, such as anatomy classes, so that "every Tom Dick and Harry isn't doing it, [creating health hazards] and getting everyone banned."

Godzik reiterated that the health board should look at regulations, not because of the expected creation of a tattoo district around Cohasset Harbor, but just as a bit of insurance for themselves. "I'm not expecting a mad rush into Cohasset, but it is better to be safe than sorry."

Pump problems grind North Cohasset residents

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

The onset of cold weather has not only brought snow and ice but malfunctions to a number of North Cohasset grinder pumps.

The pumps were installed as part of last year's North Cohasset sewer installation project. The $6 million project brought sewer service to more than 300 town homes, most of which had grinder pumps installed on the property.

With a rash of cold weather over the past month, dozens of pumps' alarms have malfunctioned, though the cause remains unclear. One belief as to the cause of the problem was that part of the pumps' computer system was installed earlier than its manufacturer, Interon, had specified. Because the pumps sat idle last winter, its computer system and heater malfunctioned causing the alarm problems. Interon Vice-President of Sales and Marketing Mike Gurnicz, would not confirm if that was the problem or not, saying it was too technical to explain.

But he did say it was "related to the control box," and that the "power converters kept cutting out causing the system not to work." Gurnicz also said it was related to the cold weather and the heating system. For the past two weeks, Interon troubleshooters have been working on the problem. "We think we've nailed it now," he said, adding, "we're hard at work, and applying all of our resources towards solving the problem."

Sewer Commission Chairman Gary Vanderweil said he thought the problem involved a missing extra loop of wire in the control panel. "When the temperature got cold, the wire contracted and loosened up," he said, causing the alarms to go off. Vanderweil said only a few units were experiencing this problem and added that the manufacturers have been busy "debugging" the system. "They've been very cooperative and good," he said.

Sewer Commissioner Henry Rattenbury also thought the problem was cold-weather related. "There is a little computer chip in these pumps and extreme changes in temperature seems to have effected this computer chip," he said. "There is a small heater but evidently, its not introducing enough heat to cause malfunctions from happening." Both Gurnicz, Vanderweil and Rattenbury said the problems should be fixed shortly.

Rattenbury said the town-owned pumps have a 10-year warranty on them, so no cost will be incurred by either the town or the homeowners. The pumps, said Rattenbury, collects a house's sewage and watewater, grinds it up, and pumps it out to a main line in the street. Because of the omnipresent granite ledge in North Cohasset, standard sewer pipes would not have been economically feasible to install.

Winter DPW guidelines listed

The D.P.W. has issued the following winter guidelines:

1. Overnight parking is prohibited from Nov. 15 through April 15.
2. Do not plow or shovel snow, water or any other debris from private property onto roadways or sidewalks.
3. Uncover storm drains when possible.
4. Sand for resident use only will be available behind the former highway garage at 55R South Main St.
5. The town is not responsible for damaged lawns, fences, steps, shrubs, trees or mail boxes within the town layout.

For this Cohasset 'big kid' life was in transition

Recalling Christmas in town 50 years ago

By Joel S. Pratt
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

By 1950, half of the 20th century was behind us. In June, five years of peace ended as the Korean war exploded. The world was in transition. And so was I.

That Spring, we sixth graders were the 'big kids' of the Ripley Road School. In June we marched down to the old Osgood School on Elm Street to see our seventh-grade classrooms and meet our new teachers. In September we would again become the 'little kids.' We had marched to Elm Street twice that Spring. In April, all of the Ripley Road School classes had participated in a 'health parade.' We straggled through the center of town to the High School. Mrs. Beal's sixth grade — my class — had to dress as fruits and vegetables! My mother had made an inverted lampshade into a hat full of bananas for me to wear. I don't think we inspired anyone to improve their diet. There were several snickers and chortles from the high school kids as we marched around the building.

Sixth grade had been great. Mrs. Hudson, our principal, started a Safety Patrol. The 'good boys' wore white belts and helped little kids across the road in front of the school. A Cohasset policeman came every morning and afternoon to direct traffic so we didn't really have a lot to do. Twice a day before going on duty, we retrieved our belts from the school office by the front door. We wore them while on duty then returned them to office. One day I walked home wearing my belt. In a panic, I ran back to the school, hoping against hope to get there before the front door was locked. No one wanted trouble with Mrs. Hudson! She was a formidable woman.

Joel Pratt in new band uniform

In fifth grade, I had started taking drum lessons from Earl Chamberlain, Cohasset's first full-time music teacher. For the first time, there was individual instrument instruction in school. He had ambitious goals for Cohasset's kids, including a real high school band. Unfortunately, the talent pool was pretty shallow. At the Spring concert on May 5, five sixth graders and a fifth grader played in the High School band! After months of tag sales and other fund raisers, our brand new blue and white uniforms arrived. Unfortunately, the sizes had been selected for high schoolers — the big kids. Mine was still too big even after my mother's best attempts at hitching and basting, but I thought it looked great.

For almost nine years we had lived on Stevens Lane within sight of the Osgood School. My sister's classmates envied her: she could leave the breakfast table and be in class four minutes later. Just when it was my turn to enjoy the short commute, the Pratt family moved. Our new house on Gammons Road was to have been started in 1949, but the contractor died. Pop had told our landlord, John Bates, that we would move out by May first, 1950. The new house, which Pop had designed, was barely started by May. But Mr. Bates had rented our Stevens Lane house to our music teacher, Earl Chamberlain. And we had to move. Move we did: four times in four months. Friends and relatives who took us in. The best stay was five weeks with my grandparents in Maine.

The town fathers, selectmen Caleb, Eben and Seth, vocalized their approach to being selectmen: "We try to be, try to be, be fatherly." It was a big hit.

Watching your own house being built is a special experience for a 12-year-old boy. Each day after school I would bike to Gammons Road. I doubt that the workmen liked having a kid underfoot but they did enjoy furthering my education. Their language and jokes, mild by today's standards, were forbidden fruit to my young ears. I told them they should do their best on our house. One carpenter, a Downeast Mainer, said "It's only a bahn, 'fit were a church we'd do it bettah." We moved into the new house late in September — just in time to watch the lawn and driveway wash away in the downpour from a hurricane. September was also when Rotary Club staged its annual fund raiser. 1949's extravagant production of 'Connecticut Yankee' did little for the scholarship fund. A new approach was tried in 1950. Three local women, Isobel Grassie, Jean Gormley and Gudren Howe wrote an original musical. 'March Meeting'. The production included a 12-piece orchestra and a cast of 50. I played a mouthy kid. It was about small town politics and love in a New England coastal town. The music and lyrics were surprisingly good. Fifty years later I still sing bits of the songs. The show opened with a lovely ballad, "Velvet Night." "Stars so low, opals in a velvet sky they glow. Sailors' guiding light, haloing the night." Clearly the fictional town was Cohasset. The town fathers, selectmen Caleb, Eben and Seth, vocalized their approach to being selectmen: "We try to be, try to be, be fatherly." It was a big hit. Once again, Cohasset people had come together to entertain their friends and neighbors and to raise money for a good cause. March Meeting appeared again for Cohasset's Bicentennial celebration in 1970.

In a panic, I ran back to the school, hoping against hope to get there before the front door was locked. No one wanted trouble with Mrs. Hudson! She was a formidable woman.

The Ripley Road School Safety Patrol, 1950 included: J. Shyne, B. Manton, R. Sullivan, G. Andrews R. Silvia, A. Almeda, T. Buckeridge, J. Cahout D. Truesdell, J. Williams, J. Pratt. N. Treager

Three Northeast Airlines pilots: Charles Cavanaugh, Ray Remick and Parker Schofield were our new Gammons Road neighbors. In October, Charlie asked me if I would like to ride with him on a flight. Would I ever! Parker, Charlie and I drove to Logan Airport where we boarded the twin engine Convair they would fly to Portland Maine. The rules were loose back then: I rode in the cockpit jump seat. Wow! What a thrill.

At 12, I was big enough to earn money working for neighbors. There was a big incentive: I desperately wanted a three-speed bike. They were called "English bicycles" back then and very few kids had them. But in 1950, Columbia started to offer American-made bikes with gears. I taped an ad from 'Boys Life' on the wall by my desk. It showed a red 3-speed which cost $ 39.95. By fall my earnings totaled less than $20; a long way from what I needed. Christmas was coming and for the first time I had money of my own to spend. What an agonizing choice: presents for the family or a new bike. My conscience won. The whole bike fund went to presents for Mom, Pop and my sister.

Christmas eve was crisp, cold and snowless. Our first Christmas tree in the new house stood by one of the big front windows, its lights reflecting in the glass. And on Christmas morning, a beautiful blue bike — yes, a three-speed — stood beside the tree. It was an English bike too, a Hercules. As soon as I was dressed, my new bike and I were off on the first of many, many miles together.

What a year it had been, packed with new experiences. I was growing and changing and so was my world. A new school, a new house, my first airplane ride. One thing had not changed. My parents still knew how to surprise me at Christmas!

'Twas the Night Before Christmas or Account of a Visit from St. Nicholas

By Clement Clarke Moore (1779-1863)

'Twas the night before Christmas, when all through the house
Not a creature was stirring, not even a mouse;
The stockings were hung by the chimney with care,
In hopes that St. Nicholas soon would be there;

The children were nestled all snug in their beds,
While visions of sugar-plums danced in their heads;
And mamma in her 'kerchief, and I in my cap,
Had just settled down for a long winter's nap,

When out on the lawn there arose such a clatter,
I sprang from the bed to see what was the matter.
Away to the window I flew like a flash,
Tore open the shutters and threw up the sash.

The moon on the breast of the new-fallen snow
Gave the luster of mid-day to objects below,
When, what to my wondering eyes should appear,
But a miniature sleigh, and eight tiny reindeer,

With a little old driver, so lively and quick,
I knew in a moment it must be St. Nick.
More rapid than eagles his coursers they came,
And he whistled, and shouted, and called them by name;

"Now, DASHER! now, DANCER! now, PRANCER and VIXEN!
On, COMET! on CUPID! on, DONDER and BLITZEN!
To the top of the porch! to the top of the wall!
Now dash away! dash away! dash away all!"

As dry leaves that before the wild hurricane fly,
When they meet with an obstacle, mount to the sky,
So up to the house-top the coursers they flew,
With the sleigh full of toys, and St. Nicholas too.

And then, in a twinkling, I heard on the roof
The prancing and pawing of each little hoof.

As I drew in my hand, and was turning around,
Down the chimney St. Nicholas came with a bound.

He was dressed all in fur, from his head to his foot,
And his clothes were all tarnished with ashes and soot;
A bundle of toys he had flung on his back,
And he looked like a peddler just opening his pack.

His eyes — how they twinkled! his dimples how merry!
His cheeks were like roses, his nose like a cherry!
His droll little mouth was drawn up like a bow,
And the beard of his chin was as white as the snow;

The stump of a pipe he held tight in his teeth,
And the smoke it encircled his head like a wreath;
He had a broad face and a little round belly,
That shook, when he laughed like a bowlful of jelly.

He was chubby and plump, a right jolly old elf,
And I laughed when I saw him, in spite of myself;
A wink of his eye and a twist of his head,
Soon gave me to know I had nothing to dread;

He spoke not a word, but went straight to his work,
And filled all the stockings; then turned with a jerk,
And laying his finger aside of his nose,
And giving a nod, up the chimney he rose;

He sprang to his sleigh, to his team gave a whistle,
And away they all flew like the down of a thistle.
But I heard him exclaim, ere he drove out of sight,
"HAPPY CHRISTMAS TO ALL, AND TO ALL A GOOD-NIGHT!"

According to sources cited at University of Toronto English Library, the original 1823 version has the last two reindeer named, "Dunder and Blixem." Also according to the UTEL, this ballad was written in 1822 for Moore's two daughters, Margaret and Charity, and a year later was anonymously published in the Troy [New York] Sentinel on December 23, 1823.

Shortsighted view

TO THE EDITOR:

Reading Valerie Lipsett's letter last week, I felt rather badly that some of our townspeople have been wincing guiltily as their short-sightedness is identified. Felt badly, because the reaction of many is limited to resentment, instead of waking up and doing some intelligent rethinking. For example, Ms. Lipsett ends her missive by recycling the nonsensical mantra that the proposed revitalization would benefit only a select few instead of the townspeople in general. (That's what I mean by ad nauseam).

Granted, the too-grandiose proposal initially suggested by CRC was counter-productive public relations, and provided ammunition to those disposed to ascribe the actions of others as somewhere between evil and self-serving. Maybe the idea of a funded Corporation further aroused the fevered suspicions, and maybe the formation of a corporation was premature. But to get anything done, and especially to seek grant money, there has to be a recognizable organizational structure. (That's equally the case for churches, playgrounds, community centers etc.).

Rather than ramming its agenda down our throats, the CRC has practically begged for public participation. The cynics may suggest that "participation" is but a fig leaf, but enthusiastic participation could have seized, adjusted, or even furthered, the agenda. Participation that is limited to "questioning and challenging" doesn't get anything constructive done, whether it's preservation through revitalization, or establishing a church, community center, playing field etc. No one has suggested that constructive input is "carping". (I mean "constructive" not destructive)

The various non-profit organizations that have assigned representatives to participate in CRC discussions do not necessarily support all of its proposals; we merely are trying to have some constructive influence. My letters express only my personal views (which seem to be shared by many), but do not purport to represent the views of any organization..

COHASSET CARES

'Tis the season for environmental conscientiousness

By Carol Martin
MEMBER, COHASSET RECYCLING COMMITTEE

Tis the season of stuff again — mountains of greeting cards, heaps of gifts wrapped in a clutter of paper. The average consumer wraps 20 gifts If each of us reuses paper, such as the Sunday comics pages or paper from a previous occasion to wrap three of those gifts, the paper saved could cover 45,000 football fields, according to the mathematicians at the "Use Less Stuff Report."

There must be some excess among the more than 2.65 billion cards sold at Christmas. Consider not sending to folks you can greet warmly in person over the holidays.

Other ways to cut waste — stash gifts in decorative bags from department and specialty stores, avoid using boxes — there's more to wrap and the box to dispose of later. Let the children entertain themselves by creating their own wrapping paper from brown grocery bags. Cut a festive design from an old sponge or carve relief shapes on the cut side of a potato and use an ink pad or craft paints.

There must be some excess among the more than 2.65 billion cards sold at Christmas. Consider not sending to folks you can greet warmly in person over the holidays.

The tree: Give a gift to the environment this year celebrating with a living Christmas Tree. A living tree will brighten your holiday and then become part of your landscaping later. Purchase a species that is appropriate for the area where you live. Keep the root ball damp and place it in a plastic tub while the tree is in the house (usually not more than 10 days). Plant your tree as soon as weather permits unless you have already prepared a hole prior to the ground freezing. Before planting allow the tree to acclimate in a protected area for several days. Shelter newly planted tree from wind.

If having a cut tree is your family's tradition, consider the following options after the holidays to give a gift back to the environment — place the tree outside after the holidays and redecorate it for the birds and squirrels. Pine cones dipped in peanut butter or Crisco and then rolled in birdseed will make your feathered friends happy. Or hang cut oranges or grapefruit from its branches. The tree provides ideal shelter and safety for the birds to feed.

Many communities use evergreens for erosion control of dunes and beaches. Consider recycling your tree after the holidays to save a beach. Check local papers.

Gifts: As you place the new clothes in your closet or the toys in the playroom consider weeding out the old and unwanted and recycling them through Good Will, Big Brother, Big Sister, Pine Street Inn or Wellspring Thrift Shop in Hull. Let your children learn the joy of sharing by offering their used, but still useful toys to an urban day care center or shelter. This time of year the papers are usually full of valuable suggestions for places to take your used toys.

Better still give a gift of yourself by volunteering to do something special for a friend or loved one -bake, decorate the home of an elder, run errands, take someone to a play or out to lunch. You've avoided the malls, the wrapping and even something to yourself, too!

A-Rod hits the jackpot

Whenever one of us hits the jackpot, whether it be by hard work, luck or through use of a gun, we are wont to compare his take to the gross national product of a Third World country. Usually, it's just hyperbole, literary license to make a point.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Well, the other day it may have happened.

Alex Rodriguez, a 25-year-old free agent baseball player, hit the jackpot with a 10-year contract from the Texas Rangers worth $252 million plus a load of incentive bonuses like $1.5 million each for winning three MVP awards.

The entire GNP of the Republic of Equatorial Guinea was only $280 million in 1993, which is apparently the last time the African nation of 431,282 people could scrape together enough funds to figure it out.

If A-Rod, as he is known on the sporting pages, goes to the plate 554 times, as he did last year with the Seattle Mariners, and earns his $21 million salary for 2001, he will have been paid roughly $38,000 every time he takes bat in hand and strides to the plate.

... he will have been paid roughly $38,000 every time he takes bat in hand and strides to the plate.

Take home pay for bread winners in Equatorial Guinea was $700 after a year in the cocoa and banana fields.

In fact, A-Rod at the end of his 10-year contract, will have made $2 million more from the Rangers than owner Tom Hicks paid for the entire franchise only three years ago. If he lasts, that is. He can walk out of the contract for more money after seven years if he wants to.

At the same time that A-Rod was becoming a multi-millionaire in Dallas, our own Red Sox were signing Manny Ramirez, a free agent outfielder for the Cleveland Indians, for a modest $160 million over eight years.

That's exactly as much as the Federated States of Micronesia, a Third World nation of 125,377 carefree souls in the Pacific, took in by entertaining tourists, processing fish and picking tropical fruits in 1990.

For the privilege of watching Manny (and Pedro and Nomar) perform, Red Sox fans will pay $55 per game for a loge seat and $18 for a seat in the upper bleachers. The last time I sat in the upper bleachers in our bandbox ballpark, I was able to get only one cheek in the seat and stood up most of the game while folks around me went out for beer.

Don't ask me how much for a luxury box at Fenway. Take that up with the vice president for loans at the Fleet Bank.

One can only stand in awe of what the modern baseball player can take to the bank with the help of a bat, a glove, a ball and a modicum of ability to use each one.

Just for the right to talk to outfielder and best hitter in the Japanese leagues Ichiro Suzuki, the Seattle Mariners paid his Japanese team, the Orix Blue Wave, $13,125,000 and then had to outbid three major league teams for his services.

Baseball has come a long way from the first professional team, the Cincinnati Red Stockings in 1869, that paid Harry Wright $1,400 for the season for managing and playing center field on the most successful team of its day. That's meal money or a good tip for today's players.

Or from the time (1939) when Gabby Hartnett, the boy from Bridgewater, knocked down $17,835 for managing, catching, sweeping up and going for coffee for the Chicago Cubs. Neither Manny nor A-Rod would think it worthwhile to show up at the park for that.

Or even from the time (1957) when future Hall of Famer Carl Yastrzemski signed with the Red Sox for a $108,000 bonus (noteworthy at the time), a two-year contract at $5,000 each plus the rest of his college expenses at Notre Dame.

What's in the future for baseball?

Well, the collective bargaining agreement between players and management expires after the 2001 season and there's talk of a strike or a lockout to get a salary cap that would protect the players, their agents and the owners from themselves.

Hedlund office hours

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, conducts monthly office hours at Cohasset Town Hall in the upstairs vestibule. He is at Town Hall today from noon to 1 p.m.

Hedlund also maintains a district office at 66 Sea St., North Weymouth, that is open Monday through Friday for constituents and appointments with the senator.

Call 781-340-9866 for information and for the senator's January hours at Cohasset Town Hall.

Marshfield, state representatives Tom O'Brien of Kingston and Kathleen Teahan of Whitman, and state representative-elect Garrett Bradley of Hingham — all Democrats.

Though Galvin insisted the proceedings were a non-partisan event — it was anything but — with many, including Galvin himself, extolling the Democratic party and reluctantly accepting the election results. Robert Colt of Medford was voted by his peers to be president of the activities, and was escorted to his position on the rostrum by Weymouth's MacKenzie. Koed of Cohasset then nominated Etta Goodstein of Dennis for vice-president. Koed was nominated for secretary by MacKenzie, who called him a "good friend." Driscoll, who raised some eyebrows by announcing he was the first "openly gay elector" during the proceedings, seconded the nomination by saying Koed was a "dedicated public servant."

Patricia Armstrong of Milton got the honors of officially nominating Gore for the presidency. She said her feelings about the election, and Gore's imminent defeat, included being "underwhelmed," "disappointed," and "sad." She also said "George Bush will never be my president."

Goodstein seconded the nomination and drew the longest ovation of the day by saying Gore was "most likely the winner of the vote in Florida."

MacKenzie later seconded the nomination of US Senator Joseph Lieberman of Connecticut for vice-president. After both nominations, Koed called out the electors' names, and they then solemnly walked across the chamber's royal blue carpet to cast their ballots, to the explosion of camera flashes. Both times Koed, as secretary, oversaw the counting of the ballots. Koed played a similar role in Florida for three weeks when he served as the Palm Beach County Democratic Party's head clerk during that county's recent recount.

Both times the vote on Monday, was unanimous, first for Gore and then for Lieberman.

For Koed, standing in front of the audience present in the chamber and those watching the proceedings on television, was a bit nerve-wracking. "I was a little bit nervous performing in front of that audience," Koed admitted. "But after a couple of minutes I felt more comfortable. It was just a great honor to be able to represent the state."

Koed found out he would be named secretary of the college while down in Palm Beach. He said he made some phone calls to the electors and was able to secure the nomination.

MacKenzie found out her role the day of college convened. The electors met beforehand and gave duties to each elector. She originally was going to be nominated for one of the two vice-president slots, but withdrew her name in favor of Russell Ashton of Wayland, who is black. Nonetheless, MacKenzie was still beaming afterwards, despite a slightly raspy voice. "It was very enjoyable, though I had a problem speaking up, I got a little hoarse at the end," said the soft-spoken MacKenzie. "But it was a thrill to be there and participate."

Though she knew Massachusetts' 12 votes would go for naught, she wasn't letting it ruin her experience. "I'm kind of not thinking about that today," she said, surrounded by her family that made the journey into Boston, from all over the South Shore, to watch. "We've known for [the results] for quite a while."

She was, however, still disappointed in the way the presidential election ended. She called the Supreme Court's decision to overturn the Florida Supreme Court's order to recount questioned ballots "awful."

"That was very upsetting to me, I was very disappointed," she said.

Driscoll said he decided to mention his homosexuality during the proceedings because he thought it provided a forum to show that gays and lesbians can play a role in politics. He also wanted his nieces and nephews to know that he is at ease with his lifestyle.

Driscoll has doubts about the future of the Electoral College. "I don't think we should try to abolish it," he said, but added, "I do think we need to look at how we can make the Electoral College more representative."

For just the fourth time in US history, the presidential candidate who lost the popular vote, won the electoral college.

"Maybe we need to go the route of Maine and Nebraska, who award their electoral votes by congressional district," he continued. "I think that would be a more attainable goal."

However, Driscoll said though the result was not what he had wanted, he was happy that "when it was all over, we'd have a peaceful and orderly transition of power."

Selectmen adopt new conditions for town-issued licenses

the parking situation along Border Street where during events at the American Legion Hall or at Atlantica Restaurant, cars will be parked along the sidewalk, sometimes up to the wall, blocking the walkway.

"All we are asking businesses who use large number of parking spots is to not just go 'First come, first serve' that they exercise some responsibility," Callahan said. "They have to come up with other ideas than just taking up all the spaces."

He suggested businesses with large events look at alternative methods such as providing valet parking.

Doane Street resident Agnes McCann said, though she basically supported the conditions, she didn't support the parking one. "Businesses aren't going to ask people 'Where did you park?', 'Did you take the last space?,'" she said. "[If it passes] you'll have lost some respect of the conditions. It's not realistic.

"I think you're looking for trouble if you put that in."

One of the problems, in Callahan's opinion, was that businesses such as the Red Lion Inn and Atlantica had been allowed to expand without providing an adequate plan for parking. "They said they could expand and just use town spaces," he said, adding the board needs some tool they can use to address these problems.

The board also had hoped to include a condition that would have required businesses to store their trash inside, or in town-approved areas outside. This condition was in response to trash problems in the village area. However Brown raised concerns that it would conflict with Board of Health regulations requiring trash be stored outside. Selectmen agreed with Brown and dropped the condition. McMorris did say the board would check with the Board of Health and try to reinstate it later.

The conditions the board approved for all license holders are:

- sidewalks and other areas abutting the building(s) will be kept free of refuse and litter at all times, and such sidewalks will be kept clear of ice and snow and will be sanded if slippery
- parking shall be permitted in public areas provided it does not cause an unreasonable increase in the number of vehicles parked in the area. This license is granted provided that all business activities will not reasonably interfere with traffic and parking, and, further, not create litter problems, public intoxication, or late night noise abutting residential neighborhoods
- the board of selectmen may conduct periodic reviews of the license to determine compliance with all license conditions

Businesses with alcohol licenses have the following condition:

- where outdoor service of alcohol is permitted, it shall be within clearly delineated areas, and shall only be in connection with sit-down dining, unless otherwise permitted in such areas as the board of selectmen in its discretion deem reasonable and proper

Businesses with entertainment licenses have the following condition:

- noise from the permitted entertainment shall be inaudible from any public way or from any abutting premises, unless specifically allowed by special permit from the zoning board of appeals.

The conditions will go into effect with the renewal of licenses.

To desire with expectations of fulfillment.

From Charleen Strelke

"HOPE is the word used for those who are in need. Love is the answer for hope"

– Charleen Strelke

Hope comes in all kinds of packages, big and small and each person defines it in their special way. This holiday season, we're asking you to help those in need achieve their own definition of Hope by making a donation to Community Newspaper Company's (CNC) Gifts of Hope campaign.

For the past eight years, readers' Gifts of Hope donations have fed local hungry children and families in and around the Boston area. And now, more than ever, more people need your help. Please join the Cohasset Mariner in giving the greatest gift of all - the gift of hope. A donation of any size goes a long way in helping those in need. Here are some helpful statistics to keep in mind while planning your gift.

- $35 provides a family of three with groceries for one week
- $100 provides 600 pounds of food at a local food pantry
- $25 provides 50 meals for hungry people.

If you are looking to volunteer this holiday season, or are a non-profit organization in need of volunteers, log on to www.townonline.com/giftsofhope for local volunteer opportunities.

Opening the season in dramatic style last Thursday, the boys basketball team grabbed an early lead and held onto it en route to a 73-55 victory over Harwich.

Junior point guard Matt Bilodeau, with a year of varsity under his belt, scored ten of his team high 17 points on foul shots, leading the Skippers to a 76% success rate from the line.

"That is going to win some ballgames," said Cohasset coach Ron Ford when asked about his team the charity stripe proficiency.

Senior forward tri-captain Erik Shea, in his third year at varsity, scored 14 points to lead the way early in the game on both sides of the floor.

"He gives us both offense and defense," appraised Ford. "He was outstanding."

Senior shooting guard T.J. Bilodeau, another tri-captain, helped pace the offense with nine points, and fired up his teammates when he returned to the game shortly after cutting open his chin in a lesion which required eight stitches.

The youngest Bilodeau brother in the program, Chris, led the junior varsity in scoring in a 52-47 victory over the Harwich JV.

After the Skippers starting five built a quick double digit cushion, sustaining the edge was left largely in the hands of the reserves, and they passed the test with flying colors, according to Ford. All 10 of the Skippers who suited up for the game scored at least a bucket.

"It is always nice when all your players score," asserted Ford, in his 10th year at the helm of Cohasset's hoop program. "What our bench has to do is come in and pick it up."

Junior Liam Martin, seeing his first varsity action, lifted the Skippers with 14 points off the bench, hitting six of seven field goals attempts.

Along with Martin, those also collecting their first varsity points off the bench were juniors Nick Bolster and Pete Maitland, and sophomore Ian Kidder. Kidder netted his first of two jumpers off an assist from a Shea, a play that Ford felt exempli-

Cohasset beats Hanover, 62-42

On Tuesday night, the Skippers made it 2-0 with an impressive 62-42 win over South Shore League rival Hanover.

Captains Shea and T.J. Bilodeau led the way with 17 and 14 points, respectively.

Sophomore power forward Ben Lynner added 12 points and 10 rebounds for the Skippers, who steadily built on a seven point halftime lead to earn the lopsided victory.

Mariner All-Scholastic Football Team

Cohasset's Buick and Davis named among area's elite

As difficult as it has been to name each of our All-Scholastic teams, selecting this squad proved to be the most challenging. Choosing a mere 22 players from the wide array of talented and hard working boys who toiled on the gridiron in Marinerland this Fall proved a daunting task, to say the least.

It was truly excruciating to eliminate several of the players you see here who received High Honorable Mention recognition. Among the more difficult omissions was Cohasset's 1,300 yard rusher Brian Krupczak.

In the end, however, there could be only 22:

A force to be reckoned with on the field for the Atlantic Coast League runners up (10-1), Morris (5'10"-185) rushed for 1,450 yards this season and scored 24 touchdowns, which is a school record...He twice rushed for 200 plus yards this year in a 46-21 win

Hockey team opens with a split

Depth in evidence in 9-3 blowout of Randolph

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset hockey team opened the season with a tough 4 - 3 loss to East Bridgewater / Abington last Wednesday, but bounced right back with a decisive 9-3 victory over Randolph on Saturday.

The Skippers fell behind 2-0 in the first period of Wednesday's season opener with the Vikings in Rockland, but rallied to tie the score in the third period at 3-3. However, Kristen MacDonald netted the game winner for the hosts with just under four minutes remaining.

"That was a game that could have gone either way," offered Cohasset coach Dennis Walsh. "I thought the kids skated well. It was just one of those game where the bounces seemed to go the other way."

Optimism grows for gymnasts with strong season opener

Cohasset/Norwell squad opens with win over Randolph, 124.4 – 109.45

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

Cohasset/Norwell gymnastics coach Kara Connerty's debut as head coach of the Skippers won't soon be forgotten.

Connerty, in her first season flying solo at the Skippers' helm after sharing the helm last year with longtime Cohasset coach Ruthann Ardizzoni watched in delight. Junior co-captains Kristin Sheerin, Carlie Carter and the rest of the Skippers rolled over Randolph 124.4 – 109.45, Tuesday night in the season opener for both teams at Cohasset.

Cohasset/Norwell showed its at least in mid-season form as the Skippers surpassed last year's season-best score in the first meet of the season.

Barring injuries, sickness and a number of other variables that inevitably pop up within any team during a high school season, Cohasset/Norwell look to be the Pilgrim Conference favorites with Hanover and Hingham.

"To start off like this is really a big thing for the girls," said Connerty. "The kids are really focused. We've had three weeks to work and they came back strong."

There was little doubt Sheerin, to quote a former Patriots' coach, was "pumped and jacked" for the opportunity to strut her stuff against the Blue Devils after a fifth-place finish in last year's State Individual Championship. The Skippers, after all, are coming off a season in which they surprised many in the conference with a second-place tie with Randolph. And with defending champions Scituate out of the mix because, amazingly, the Sailors didn't have the numbers to field a team this winter, the Skippers outlook for this season appears even brighter.

Sheerin was in a class unto herself in sweeping all four events and taking the all-around with a very solid 33.9 in front of a crowd that seemed to know this could be Cohasset's

Career stats find Morris, who also played defensive back and offensive linebacker, with more than 3,500 yards rushing, 45 TD's and 12 interceptions, two of which were returned for touchdowns (a school record). Morris was WATD's Player of the Year in the ACL and was also selected to Patriot Ledger, Herald and Globe All-Scholastic teams. He was also an ACL All-Star. Morris will be attending Rutgers University on a full Lacrosse scholarship. Marshfield coach Lou Silva: "He's a consummate team player. He's totally unselfish. He just does what he has to do to win. When we needed a big play, he had the ability to take over. He's a phenomenal athlete."

Sean Morris

Mike Carven - Jr.

Carven (5'10"-150) also rushed for 500 yards, scored two touchdowns and carried in two conversions. Completed 51 percent of the passes he attempted this year and averaged 18 yards a reception. When he carried the ball, Carven averaged 4.4 yards per carry. Also started the last three games of the year at defensive back. Carven is a guard on the basketball team and is a midfielder on the lacrosse team. He will start at quarterback next year for Hanover and is a captain elect. Hanover coach Dave Mamaron: "He's a great athlete. He has the ability to just take over a game. He's a very intelligent football player and he makes good decisions. We had three kids up for quarterback this year and he proved the first day that he was the number one guy. We're very lucky to have him."

He's one of the best athletes I've ever coached. He's also very tough and a great leader on and off the field."

Bryan Butterworth

Bob Murphy - Sr. Capt.
Rockland

Rockland coach Ken Owen: "He's just electric. He liked a lot of space, and when we gave it to him, he was deadly. He's got a God-given ability and nobody works harder."

Bob Murphy

Patriot Ledger All-Star...Like Bryan, he is also a mainstay for the S.H.S baseball team...Scituate football coach Phil Pisano: "Like his brother, David has a great deal of natural talent and toughness. He did whatever we asked of him on both sides of the ball this year, and I think he's going to dominate this league next year."

David Butterworth

Owen Leone - Sr.
Marshfield
Tight End/Defensive back

Was the Rams' top receiver this year and was looked to a lot by Marshfield (10-1) senior quarterback Jon Hollis, who frequently connected with Leone (6'1"-200)... Constantly double-teamed, Leone had a remarkable ability to find the ball...Also was a threat from his defensive back position, nabbing three interceptions in Marshfield's 33-0 blanking of Div. 3 Super Bowl champions Rockland, tying a school record for most interceptions in a game...Had five interceptions this year...Was an ACL All-star...Leone is interested in attending either UMass Amherst or the University of Vermont, but he will not continue his football career. Marshfield coach Lou Silva: "Owen's a very quiet and reserved player, but he always came to play. We didn't throw the ball too much, but when we did, we could count on Owen to be there. He has the best hands on the team."

Owen Leone

Lyon Carter- Sr. Capt.
Silver Lake
Offensive/Defensive lineman

The 6'4"-275 pound lineman was recently named to the State's "Big 26" team, one of only five Massachusetts linemen to receive this honor from the Greater Boston Gridiron Club...an Old Colony League All-Star...three year starter for the Lakers...was hobbled much of the season by a severe ankle sprain, which limited him to playing just offensive line for four games...Lyon has been approached by more than 100 colleges, but is hoping to go with an Ivy League school (Harvard and Brown are his top two choices)...Silver Lake coach Jeff Knight: "Lyon is the strongest kid I've ever had in this program. He really was a man among boys out there most of the time, and I think he's going to have a great college career wherever he winds up."

Lyon Carter

Matt McDonald - Jr.
Rockland
Offensive Lineman/Defensive End

Was a force on both sides of the ball for the Div. 3 Super Bowl champs... Served as the key blocker for Rockland's top back Bob Murphy, many of whose long runs were made possible by McDonald (6'2-225)...He has a tremendous ability to run and has the size to back it up with...He made many key plays for the Patriot League champs (9-1) from his defensive end position as well...McDonald will return as the Bulldogs' top lineman next year...Was a Patriot League All-star. Rockland coach Ken Owen: "He was very consistent for us this year. He took a lot of pride in his downfield blocking for Murphy. We'd set them up on the same side of the ball and it always worked. I don't remember him ever having a bad game. He just loves to play."

Matt McDonald

Zack Giles - Sr. Capt.
Marshfield
Guard/Defensive End

Probably the most decorated lineman in state history, Giles (6'4"-280) was a force on the field for the Atlantic Coast League runners up (10-1)...Was used on both sides of the ball as a guard and defensive end...Giles was this year's Gatorade Player of the Year in Massachusetts, was an ACL and All-State All-Star and was selected to the Globe, Herald and Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic teams...On Dec. 30, he will being playing in the first-ever All-American High School football game, which will be broadcast live on Fox from Dallas, Tx. at noon...Giles and a player from Connecticut were the only two from New England to be selected for the game...Giles has accepted a scholarship offer from the University of Notre Dame, where he will continue his football career as a guard. Marshfield coach Lou Silva: "He's just an extraordinary football player. People obviously have recognized his talents because he's made every all-star team there is to make. He's probably the best lineman we've ever had and he's definitely the most decorated and honored football player to come out of Marshfield High."

Zack Giles

Kyle Sheperd - Sr. Capt.
Abington
Guard/Defensive tackle

Will go down as one of the top ten offensive linemen in Abington High history, according to coach Jim Kelliher...Shepard (6'-200) is a tremendous leader on the field from both his guard and defensive tackle positions...Had a stellar year on the line for Abington, which finished just under .500 this year at 4-5...Sheperd is vice-president of the National Honor Society and is ranked seventh in his class...Was a South Shore League All-star...Sheperd is considering attending Tufts, WPI, or Northeastern University next year, where he would like to continue his football career. Abington coach Jim Kelliher: "I think really highly of Kyle. He's a prototypical offensive guard/defensive tackle. He did a tremendous job. He doesn't say much, but he's a terrific leader. He's a gentleman at school and doesn't change his personality on the field. His future is very bright."

Kyle Sheperd

Craig Davis- Sr. Capt.
Cohasset
Offensive/Defensive lineman

The 6'3-250 pound lineman is a two-time South Shore League All-Star...Was one of 36 Eastern Mass Division 4 players named to the Boston Globe's All-Star team...chosen as the "outstanding lineman" at C.H.S. each of the last two years... A three year starter for the Skippers, playing on both sides of the ball the last two seasons...Craig is being looked at by a number of schools, including Stonehill, Assumption, Bryant and Trinity, and he hopes to major in business...Cohasset football coach Tony Rolfe: "All you need to know about Craig is that football is his thing. He has talent, but the big thing is that you know he's going to do whatever he has to keep getting better."

Craig Davis

DEFENSE

Paul Lombardo- Sr. Capt.
Scituate
Offensive/Defensive lineman

The 5'10"-215 pound lineman was a two year, two-way starter for the Sailors...A Patriot League All-Star...He's currently considering URI, UNH and Plymouth State, though he remains undecided on whether or not he'll play college football....He's looking to major in communications or marketing...Also a standout in lacrosse for S.H.S. in the Spring, he's already been voted captain of this year's squad... Scituate football coach Phil Pisano: "Paul is just a great kid with a great attitude. He's got a great sense of humor on and off the field, but when it comes to getting the job done he's all business and does an outstanding job. He loves the game and that just comes across in everything he does around the field."

Paul Lombardo

Keith Kent - Sr. Capt.
Marshfield
Defensive End/Fullback

Was one of the Rams' top defensive players on their massive line...A three-year starter for the Atlantic Coast League runners up (10-1), Kent (6'2"-235) was almost unblockable...His speed and quickness off the ball made him a force on the field...On offense, Kent was used as a fullback/blocker and did most of his damage muscling out yards up the middle...Was an ACL All-Star and was chosen as the Marshfield Firefighters' Player of the Game for his Thanksgiving Day efforts against Duxbury, where he had a sack and rushed for five first downs....Kent has received offers from both Northeastern University and the University of Maine...Kent says he is leaning more toward NU. Marshfield coach Lou Silva: "Keith just had a nose for the ball. He's probably one of the best overall defenders we've ever seen here. He just loves to hit people and when he does, they just bowl over. We could build an entire team around Keith."

Keith Kent

Wayne Harrington - Sr. Capt.
Rockland
Linebacker/Defensive back

An extremely intelligent player, Harrington ran the defense for the Div. 3 Super Bowl champion Bulldogs (9-1)...Also an outstanding receiver, Harrington (6'-185) had two big receptions for 43 yards against Bishop Feehan in Rockland's 20-3 bowl win and had a key interception in the game which led to a second quarter touchdown...He also ran the ball a bit this year and did some blocking...Was a Patriot League All-star... Harrington is ranked fourth in his class and is considering three colleges, Dartmouth, Colby, and Amherst, all of which have recruited him to play football. Rockland coach Ken Owen: "Wayne's a real headsy player. He's extremely intelligent and understands what we need on defense. He called all our defensive signals, loves to study pass plays, runs the ball well and is an excellent blocker. He's like a coach on the field."

Wayne Harrington

Brandon McPhail- Sr. Capt.
Silver Lake
Linebacker/Halfback

The 6'1"-228 pound back was an Old Colony League All-Star as a running back...voted team MVP.... runner up for WATD's Player of the Year in the OCL...rushed for 15 touchdowns this fall and nearly 1,100 yards... has been recruited by several colleges as a tight end, fullback or linebacker, but is leaning towards Central Connecticut at the moment...He may also play baseball in college, as he is a standout on both the Silver Lake team and the Kingston Legion team... Silver Lake head coach Jeff Knight: "I think Brandon has all the tools to be a very good player at the next level (college). He did a very nice job for us this season, and I think he still has a lot of untapped potential."

Brandon McPhail

Ronan Buick- Sr.
Cohasset- Linebacker

A South Shore League All-Star...Voted team MVP... Cohasset coach Tony Rolfe honestly estimates that the 6'2"-185 pound Buick was in on half the tackles his team recorded this year...Football is actually Ronan's #2 sport. His best shot at an athletic scholarship is likely to come for lacrosse....He was named to the second team of the All-South Conference all-star lacrosse team last year as a junior after leading the Skippers in scoring (25 goals, 15 assists) last Spring....Among the colleges he is presently considering are Providence, Dennison and Tufts...He would like to concentrate his studies in science or math...Cohasset football coach Tony Rolfe: "Ronan is the one guy we really could not have done without this season. I know we wouldn't have won five games without him. The bottom line is that he just makes plays."

Ronan Buick

Eric Diamond - Sr. Capt.
Marshfield
Linebacker/Halfback

Was a quiet force on the line on the inside for the Atlantic Coast League runners up (10-1)...Diamond (6'2"-215) was a three-year starter on the Marshfield team...On the offensive side, Diamond came up big as a halfback/block-er...Unbelievably fast off the ball, Diamond's won over his opponents with intelligence and strength rather than flashy techniques...Still had a stellar season despite missing a couple games with a hamstring injury...Was an ACL All-Star...Diamond has accepted and academic scholarship to attend Yale University, where he will continue his football career. Marshfield coach Lou Silva: "His future is so bright. He was slightly overshadowed by Keith (Kent) and Bob (McDonough) but he did his job every play every game. He was always where he belonged. He led by example. He's a great kid and was a great captain."

Eric Diamond

Brent Light - Sr. Capt.
Rockland
Linebacker/Running back

A force to be reckoned with on both sides of the ball, Light (5'9"-180) is one of the toughest players around...Also a running back, Light did most of his damage on defense for the Div. 3 Super Bowl champions (9-1) and is the team's number one tackler two years running...Rockland coach Ken Owen calls Light the "best unknown running back around" as he came up big when he ran up the middle for the Bulldogs, scoring nine touchdowns this season in the process...Was a Patriot League All-star...Light is considering attending a prep-school before looking at colleges. Rockland coach Ken Owen: "He's got a knack for finding the football. His asset, like our team asset, is his speed. He's quick off the mark and is a tough blocker. He's strong as a bull."

Brent Light

Mike Mohan- Sr. Capt.
Norwell- Halfback/Deep back

A South Shore League All-Star...The 5'10"-165 pound Mohan rushed for 750 yards on the season, despite missing five games with a strained medial collateral ligament in his knee and never regaining 100 percent mobility in that leg after having suffered the injury in the third game of the season....He had six touchdowns in those first two games, along with 430 yards rushing to place him atop all runners in Eastern Mass at that time...He's still weighing his collegiate options...Mike is also the starting point guard on the Norwell High basketball team...Norwell coach Jim Sullivan: "Mike was a coach's dream player. He's obviously a very talented, tough and athletic kid. We had a lot of injuries this year, but his hurt the most. Still, he was there at every practice and every game, rooting us on and providing leadership. If it were up to him, you know he would've been back on the field the week after the injury."

Mike Mohan

Brendan St. Peter - Jr.
Marshfield - Outside Linebacker

Was the youngest of the Rams' linemen, but made a name for himself this year for the Atlantic Coast League runners up (10-1)...St. Peter's (6'3"-215) size and speed caused headaches for his opponents...This was his first year at linebacker, as he was a defensive end his sophomore year...Was a force in bringing down running backs who dared to run up the middle...Will be the Rams' top lineman next year...Was a ACL All-star. Marshfield coach Lou Silva: "He's got everything. He's got the size, he's got the speed and he's nasty out there. He's going to be the next kid we have to go to a Div. 1 school and will graduate the best linebacker we've ever had."

Matt Burnieika - Sr. Capt.
Rockland
Defensive Lineman/Guard

Provided stellar defense for the Div. 3 Super Bowl champs (9-1) this year...Had a sack in the team's 20-3 bowl win over Bishop Feehan and was key to preventing gains for the Shamrocks...A big-play player, Burnieika (5'10"-180) got the job done both on defense and offense, as he also ran with the ball a bit...Was a Patriot League All-star. Rockland coach Ken Owen: "He had a nose for the ball and was very quick. Up the line, he provided very tough defense. He combined with Brent Light were deadly for us on defense. When we needed a big play, I could always count on Matt."

Matt Burnieika

Bob McDonough - Sr.
Marshfield
Defensive/Offensive lineman

Unquestionably one of the team's the most noticeable defensive forces on its massive line... Marshfield's (10-1) top tackler, McDonough (6'4"-265) was a virtual wall that opponents just couldn't get around...He also came up big on the offensive line, constantly opening holes for the team's running backs...This was evidenced by the fact that the Rams outscored their opponents 426-76...Referred to by Rams coach Lou Silva as the "unsung hero" of the offensive/defensive line...Was an ACL All-star...McDonough has accepted a full football scholarship to Northeastern University. Marshfield coach Lou Silva: "Bobby's the best tackle we've ever had here. He's big, strong, quick off the ball. There wasn't an offensive line around that could block him. He's going to make a name for himself."

Crusaders storm to next level

Local soccer talent's elite improve scholarship prospects with club league play

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

There are a few names local high school soccer fans could probably count on seeing on pretty much a daily basis when they opened up their sports sections this past Fall, among them Marshfield High's Nick Call, Chris Corcoran, T.J. Fleming, Eben Gunnarson, Brian Johnson and Aaron Kleinerman, Norwell High's Jarrod Anderson and Chris Camerota, Duxbury's Joe Crowley and Kevin Flaherty, Eric Shea from Cohasset, Randolph's Dan Ng, Eric Danner of Silver Lake High School and Scott Moses of Milton Academy and Hanover.

Is it a coincidence that all 14 of these young men are members of the Massachusetts Premiere League Crusaders club team? What do you think?

"It's fun picking up the paper some time and seeing the names of all my kids," said Crusaders head coach Bill Johnson, who works these guys on the soccer field pretty much the whole year before and after the high school season, with a chuckle. "But as hard as these guys work and as committed as they are, it's really no surprise that they do as well as they do."

Most of these young men have been playing together nine months a year for several years. It all started when what was essentially a 10-year old Marshfield boys soccer team received club sponsorship. Gradually, elite players from other towns began to trickle in as Marshfield kids fell away. Cohasset's Erik Shea joined at the age of 12, Norwell's Camerota and Anderson a year later, the same year the Crusaders traveled to Europe to take part in an international tourney.

"That was just an incredible experience," said Camerota of the Trans-Atlantic trek. "Just going over there was great, but then getting to see the way those players performed was a real eye opener."

The Crusaders have also been making several trips a year to take part in regional and national tourneys all over the U.S.. They have gone to the Massachusetts Premier League (MAPLE) State Finals each of the last three years— winning the title to advance to the Finals in their region (Virginia to Maine) in 1999, making them one of the top eight teams in the nation.

Along the way, several other elite local players have hooked up with the Crusaders, while many others have dropped off, the most common reason being a conflict with just about anything normal adolescents and young men like to do with their lives besides soccer.

"We've asked a lot of these kids and in some cases too much," concedes Johnson, Silver Lake High's Athletic Director and former boys soccer coach. "I give a lot of credit to kids who've stuck with it and to the parents too. It's a big commitment both financially and in terms of time. These kids only started driving in the last year. Up until then, they were counting on parents to get them to practices and everything else."

Johnson truly does know where of he speaks. In addition to being the coach, his own son, Brian, has been a Crusader since the beginning. On the soccer fields this fall, Brian led the Eastern Mass Division 1 champion Marshfield team in scoring, and became one of just three Marshfield High players ever selected as an All-American. Marshfield High and Crusaders' teammate Chris Corcoran was also one of those three.

Both Brian and Chris will play Division 1 soccer on a half scholarship next year. Brian has chosen Rutgers and Chris has recently given his verbal commitment to St. John's. Both will receive "significant scholarships."

"There's no doubt that playing for the Crusaders has had a lot to do with my success," said Corcoran. "The competition we've faced has been so good, and Mr. Johnson is such a great coach. I really can't thank him enough for everything he's done for me. It's really brought out the best in all of us."

Indeed. Just about all of the Crusaders players are now seeing their tremendous commitment pay off. All should receive some athletic scholarship money. Of course, most will literally have to fight for every dollar.

Scholarship money for soccer is extremely limited, with most of the available money for males going to high revenue producers like football and basketball. Division 1 schools have a maximum of 9.9 scholarships available, which can be divvied up anyway the coaches see fit. Of course, only the 'big time' soccer schools regularly go to the max. The majority of Division 1 schools generally have far less to offer.

Making things more difficult in the scholarship battle is the fact that they are competing against the rest of the world for this financial support, as most big schools actively recruit outside the U.S..

This is another reason why Club team affiliation proves so valuable. Beyond giving these kids an opportunity to play at the highest levels and expose them to college scouts, the Club teams also becomes networking central in a lot of cases. This is a role Bill Johnson takes very seriously as senior year winds down for his players.

Johnson figures he's been taking at least two or three calls a day over the last month from college recruiters interested in one or more of his Crusaders. He also figures he's been making at least that many calls himself. This is in addition to creating individualized information packets and mailing them (by both "e" and "snail") all over to potential suitors.

At the time of this writing, several of the Crusaders players had not yet chosen a college. A lot of them are holding out hope of drawing some interest at some of the 'showcase' tourneys the Crusaders will take part in over the next few months, most notably the upcoming tournament at the Sun Bowl in Tampa Bay, starting Dec. 26 and held primarily for the benefit of college coaches, who are in Tampa then for their annual national convention.

The Crusaders will also be in Virginia in March for the prestigious Chesterfield Invitational, and in Dallas the following month for another big tourney.

"You've got to be proactive with this," said Johnson, explaining his efforts to grease the recruiting process for his Crusaders. "A lot of people figure you just have to play well and the scouts will come out, but that's not always the case. There are a lot of kids out there playing well. This is just so competitive that you've got to promote yourself. You've got to ask the college people to come around."

With all of his efforts, Bill Johnson is basically putting himself out of the soccer coaching business. Teams can compete in Club play up until the age of 18, so that gives his team another year of eligibility. However, with the kids off to college hither and yon, most of the longtime core will probably be broken up.

"I guess in a way it's a little sad that it's all coming to and end," confessed Johnson. "But if we can help all of these kids get into college, it'll have been well worth it. And I think we've all got some great memories to look back on."

Several Crusaders players were only to happy to corroborate that impression, one of them Eben Gunnarson, an original Crusader member: "Mr. Johnson is doing an incredible job for us. He's one of the best coaches anywhere, and he's done so much for all of us. He's given us all some phenomenal experiences."

Don't feel too badly for Bill Johnson, however. He has a 12-year old son and he has the option of starting the whole thing over again next year.

"That's definitely something worth considering," Johnson says with a grin.

Wrestlers show good signs

Young team opens 2-2

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

The Cohasset wrestling team is right about where coach Torin Sweeney figured they'd be at this point, with two wins and two losses.

The 18th year head coach always arranges one of the toughest schedules in the area, and he's made no exception this season, despite the loss of several key team members to graduation.

"Our goal is to be the best we can be by season's end, and wrestling against the best is the best way to do that," Sweeney offered. "We're a young team overall, but we've got potential."

Last Wednesday, the grapplers opened the season with a 40-21 loss to perennial powerhouse B.C. High.

The highlight of this match was a showdown at the 152-pound class between Cohasset junior captain Dan Littauer and the Eaglets' purported top wrestler, Cohasset native Ben Kinch. After a tight first period, Littauer broke a 2-2 deadlock in the second with a quick takedown, and then managed to notch the pin to close out the thrilling match.

Cohasset also got wins from senior tri-captain Dan Duffy in the 135-pound division, sophomore Phil Strazzola in the 112 and senior Antoine Miller in the heavyweight class (190-275 pounds). Miller, 190 pounds, managed to slap a pin on his counterpart despite giving away approximately 35 pounds.

Cohasset hosted a four team match on Saturday with Canton, Dedham and Milton on the guest list.

The Skippers got the better of Dedham, 54-21, and Canton, 45-33, but fell to Milton, 60-15.

Sophomore Terry Baroudi (130 pound division) was the only Skipper to pull off wins in all three matches.

Littauer, Duffy and Miller were able to notch two wins each, with the latter recording his second and third pins of the season despite once again giving away a significant size advantage in the heavyweight division.

Sophomores Vinnie Gratta (103 pounds) and Braun Goodson (189 pounds) also managed a pair of victories. For Goodson, who missed the B.C. High match due to injury, these were his first two wins of his wrestling career, with both of them coming on pins.

"Overall, I'm pleased," said coach Sweeney. "I figured we'd be in good shape if we were 2-2 at this point. With our lack of experience, it's going to take a while before we really know what kind of team we have, so the key is remaining close to .500 and staying focussed."

Hockey team opens with a split

The 9-3 victory on Friday over Randolph featured a hat trick from junior forward Sean Chase and two goals apiece from Davis and Dave Bouchard. O'Connell and Dan Morse netted the other two. Each one of the three main forward lines accounted for goals in the game, which Walsh feels is a reflection of one of his team's primary strengths: frontline depth.

"Our forwards are skating well and creating opportunities," appraised the veteran of 32 seasons. "The younger players are coming along quickly and providing some nice depth."

In fact, the overall quality up front has allowed Walsh to shore up an area of concern by dropping sophomore winger Tom Anderson back to defense.

Of course, Walsh is quick to point out that much of the rotation is still in a state of flux.

"We're still playing around with combinations and trying to get the right blend," said Walsh. "But it does seem we've got some nice options."

Skippers ruffle Rough Ryders

fied the unselfish charge of the Skippers.

"I was very pleased with the balanced attack," stated Ford.

The 73 points scored by the Skippers is quite impressive, but Ford seemed to take it in stride. The veteran coach reports that he is setting his sights very high for the offense this season.

"Our goal is to score over 70 per game," explained Ford. "Our defense created a lot of our offense."

Ford's optimism is fueled by the fact that he feels he has excellent depth around the perimeter. He feels that virtually every player on the squad has the capability of consistently hitting three pointers; even sophomore power forward Ben Lynner, whose main objective is to bang around bodies under the basket, has been known to stick an outside jumper or two.

"This is a team the could probably shoot 33% on threes," reported Ford. "Everybody has got a green light."

Defensively, the Skippers were able to keep the Rough Ryders guessing, mixing up zone presses with halfcourt and fullcourt man-to-man. Cohasset was able to force 17 Harwich turnovers.

"That's the style that suits us," asserted Ford. "If we've got sustained chaos out there, I'm going to feel pretty good about our chances."

Game Notes

- Cohasset not only shot a high percentage from the foul line, but got to the line 13 more times than the Roughriders.

-Neither team scored any fast break points in the first half.

-Harwich forced the game's only shot clock violation.

-After being down 37-22 at halftime, the closest the Roughriders came was 39-32 with 12:32 left in the game.

-Martin converted two and-one's in the second half.

-The Skippers did not record a block.

-Cohasset shot 53% from the field.

year. Carter, who was her usual consistent self, was second with a 32.2, racking up three seconds and a third along the way. Randolph's Jessica MacDonald was third in 30.7 and recorded an 8.4, second-place finish to Sheerin's 8.6 on the beam.

Randolph was running on less than full strength due to injuries, and never was able to mount a serious challenge to Cohasset/Norwell. The Blue Devils, though, did come up with some strong performances. Jen Ng picked up a pair of thirds on the floor exercise (8.2) and bars (7.4) and Jillian Ferragamo was third on the vault (7.85).

Cohasset/Norwell ran out to an early lead and held a 61.2 – 50 cushion by the halfway mark. The floor exercise proved to be the event of the night, as Sheerin's upbeat routine was good for an 8.9. Carter was right on the mark to edge Ng for second with her 8.3 and was third behind Sheerin and MacDonald on the beam with a 7.9.

The Skippers duo had their 1-2 punch working on the bars as Sheerin nailed an 8.3 and Carter was right behind with an 8.1 in front of Ng.

"Kristin and Carlie have really matured," said Connerty. "They're (Cohasset/Norwell) a good group of girls."

Connerty, Norwell's head coach for two years before the teams merged at the start of the '98-'99 season, believes the Skippers will be ready for a strong run at the conference title, but quickly added the team will have to remain injury-free and stay focused during every meet.

"Any team can beat any other," Connerty said. "You have to be on all the time. A couple of falls and things can blow up on you. We have more depth and consistency this year."

School crossing guard takes it all in stride

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Behind the badge and uniform is a Deer Hill mother who loves children.

That's the main reason Sandra Zappolo signed on as the town's first official civilian crossing guard.

"I love working for the school," said Zappolo, who also works at Deer Hill as an activity aide and helps in the school office.

Zappolo, who reports to the police department for her crossing guard job, is on duty on Sohier Street in front of the joint Osgood-Deer Hill driveway for 1-1/2 hours in the morning and about an hour in the afternoon.

Now that winter has set in, she assists five-to-10 walkers who cross the busy street to go to and from the elementary schools every day. In the warmer months, fewer parents drive their children so that number will increase to 20 or more, she says.

Zappolo's stepping into the role – that she performed unofficially in the afternoon for the past year – is the happy ending to a brewing controversy stirred up by a petition signed by concerned parents. The parents, led by Peter and Donna Pratt of Ripley Road, asked that the town return to using police officers at the crosswalk.

Until about two years ago when the new Osgood School opened, Cohasset police had traditionally served as crossing guards but stopped at that time to free up the highway cruiser. Police subsequently turned the crosswalk duties over the school department.

But the school department had no money to fund the position, school officials said, so the staff at Deer Hill including the janitor, aides and principal shared the duties. There was always someone out there and no child was put at risk, officials said.

Still, the crossing guard issue surfaced again this fall when the Pratts, whose son was initially assigned to be a walker this year, were taken aback when they discovered police officers no longer covered the school crossing. They circulated a petition addressing what they saw as a public safety problem. Coincidentally at about the same time, the school board planned to hire a permanent school crossing guard with grant moneys.

But before that could be accomplished, the issue ended up before selectmen who stepped in and recommended the crossing guard report to the police. The $8,000 for the $12 an hour position was transferred to the police budget at October's Special Town Meeting and police sought applicants.

Police Chief Brian Noonan is pleased with the new arrangement.

"It's working out fine," he said. Noonan said Zappolo has been through CPR training. Police are also obtaining safety and traffic law videos for her to see that will even include how to conduct a school bus evacuation.

Deer Hill School principal Paul Callahan said he is happy the issue is resolved.

"The safety of the children was always my chief concern," he said. Callahan said although he would prefer a police officer at the crossing, Zappolo's uniform and badge help send a message to motorists to slow down.

Zappolo, who stops the traffic completely before allowing the children to cross, says common sense is her best tool. Speeders, especially trucks, are common along the hilly street that provides one of the main access ways to Rte. 3A in town, she said.

Yet if needed, the police are not far away. Earlier this week, for example, a cruiser tucked in by the Music Circus waited to nab those exceeding the speed limit. "We're ready to give a little assistance," Noonan said.

Zappolo said the children, many of whom know her from recess and lunch where she serves as an activity aide, are comfortable with her. They call her Mrs. Zappolo.

But more importantly, her new job passed muster with her own children, Carley, 9, a fourth-grader, and Nick, 11, a sixth-grader at Deer Hill.

"They're fine with it," she said.

Schools know the meaning of giving

SCHOOL'S IN

JENNIFER PIEPENBRINK

Hello Everyone! This weeks school column is definitely showing the meaning of holiday spirit. The schools have been very hard at work in helping others in many ways.

At the Osgood School, one of the Osgood School Improvement Plan goals under Character Education is: "Continue to get children involved in community action and volunteerism..." The students and staff are pleased to share the information below about our holiday projects based on kindness and giving.

The Kindergarten classes were hard at work preparing Holiday Gift Baskets for the Cohasset Food Pantry. Each child brought a special treat to school, including chocolates, special cookies and fruit. The treats were combined and wrapped in cellophane to make several gift baskets that will be enjoyed by families in the community.

Students in Grades K-3 participated in Operation Dear Abby, a card and letter writing program created by syndicated columnist, Abigail Van Buren. The children wrote more than 250 cards and letters to American service men and women that are stationed far away from their families during the holidays. Mrs. Blume's first grade class counted, sorted and eventually mailed all of the letters. They certainly got a small taste of what it was like at the post office. We hope that our holiday greetings will bring a smile to faces of those who protect us this holiday season.

Again this year, the Osgood first graders participated in a sharing project to benefit children serviced by Wellspring in Hull. The children were asked to earn the cost of a pair of mittens, socks or a hat by performing good deeds. The response, according to first grade coordinator, Mrs. Hurley, was very heartwarming and generous. A spokesperson from Wellspring will speak to the children about their role in this community outreach project.

Students at the Osgood have also been participating in a program called, "Spread The Word", which is run annually by the Massachusetts Department of Education.

Children donated their used books and the Department of Education delivers them to schools for children who have few or no books at home. The students in Mrs. Owens-Rigby's class have been collecting, sorting and counting the books that will be donated to the "Spread The Word" program. With just a few days until the donation deadline of Dec. 22, here is the current total: 1,348 books for children in grades k-3. In addition, many children donated preschool books which will be donated to local homeless shelters that house the families.

Last, but certainly not least, the third grade students in Ms. Hanson's class had a coat drive. We collected coats to send to Carolina Hills, Father Bill's Place and other agencies. Every one pitched and helped donate. Our whole class sorted coats and sized them. We also sorted blankets. It was hard work. We took coats of all sizes and we had different jobs like, writers and pinners. We have approximately 280 coats and 30 blankets. This was written by students Cameron Lucitt and Thomson Jaffe. What a great job to all the students, you have made many peoples holidays a little bit brighter! We are all very proud of you.

Also at the Osgood, the Annual Holiday Concert was held this past Tuesday. All grades sang a performed beautifully. Mr. McGinnus does a wonderful job every year with his students and this concert shows that magic of music that he gives to all. A special thanks goes out to Piano Revival Company of Brockton for donating a gorgeous, baby grand piano for the day. Also, thank you so much to Lucia Flibotte for the fantastic backdrop that she supplies each year.

Everyone make sure to mark Feb. 10 on your calendar. The Cohasset PSO is holding the "Valentine Days Soiree" at the South Shore Country Club in Hingham. Here, you can expect a night of dancing, eating and a few drinks, good company and a lot of fun, laughs and even romance in the air. Back by popular demand will be the beautiful Chinese Baskets produced by our very own classrooms. Invitations to all our families in the School system will receive invitations mailed to your home, after the 1st of the year. Tickets will be $40 per person or $75 per couple. Mark the date, book a babysitter and come support your schools while having a great time. Tickets will also be sold by the Executive Board of the Cohasset PSO.

The Second Annual Alumni Hockey Game will be played on Jan. 1 at the Pilgrim Arena in Hingham. The time is 12:30-2:30 p.m. and tickets are $5 for adults and $3 for children. Come and join the fun, watch the Alumni team play the current Varsity Team and even buy some tickets for the raffle, which will be during the game.

Last year, over 300 spectators had a great time and this year will be even better. What a great way to start the new year!

That is all for this week! I hope that you all enjoy the holidays and take the time to enjoy all the magic and wonder that this time of the year brings. Happy Holidays! Officials speak out on homelessness

Massachusetts Coalition on Homelessness. She added a recent report from the McCormack Institute at UMass-Boston stated there are more than 35,000 homeless families in Massachusetts right now, a total of 55,000 men, women, and children.

"The number of homeless families in the state has increased by 112 percent since 1990," Lawrence added. "It's about as bad as I've ever seen it. All the shelters are just maxed out in terms of capacity. We're hearing that there's at least 100 families a night being put into emergency beds in motels. Housing has become so unaffordable that even middle class folks are having trouble keeping roofs over their heads. Without building more affordable housing, the shelters will always be backed up."

But there maybe something hope on the horizon. Philip Mangano, executive director of the Massachusetts Housing and Shelter Alliance, said his organization filed a bill on Dec.7 which would create a division of affordable housing within the Massachusetts Department of Housing and Community Development.

"The division will be charged with establishing, financing, and implementing an affordable housing program targeted toward homeless citizens of (Massachusetts) with the expressed purpose of ending homelessness...Within 180 days of presentation to a shelter and appropriately documenting homelessness, an individual or family shall be offered placement by the division in permanent housing."

John Wagner of the state office of health and human services said the state currently spends a total of $123 million per year on homeless-related services, but he said the problem is still not getting any better.

"These days, instead of just focusing on providing space, we're trying to focus on methods of (homelessness) prevention and support," he said. "One of the huge things for us is preventing homelessness but at the same time, we need support methods so people are able transition into their own homes."

One of the problems which Wagner thinks causes homelessness is people being discharged from state programs under groups like the Department of Social Services, Department of Youth Services, and the Department of Mental Health.

"The state needs to recognize the responsibility it has in discharging these people," Wagner said. "And the fact is, a lot of individuals who are homeless usually have other issues."

"This situation really isn't a happy story. And what the public has to realize, especially during the holidays, is that there's a whole other group of people out there on the streets who aren't really living the American dream."

Eliot Binder, executive director at Carolina Hill

"There's a lot of awareness out there," Lawrence said, "there's a lot of giving and a lot volunteerism. But we need permanent solutions within our own communities. I think this situation can be reversed if there's a will from the public to reverse it. The people need to raise their voices and find ways to get roofs over all these people's heads."

Shelter directors around the South Shore agree with Lawrence.

"The homeless problem is at a peak right now," said Dorothy Newell, director of the South Shore Friends of the Homeless organization based in Weymouth. "We're doing the very best we can but there's only so much we can do. We do need more affordable housing, but we also need the public to stay on top of what's going on. It's a year-round problem. There are things out there that are beyond people's control. My advice is to always budget carefully and spend frugally because you never know what can happen. Many people are just a few months away from being homeless."

"Different communities need to strategize amongst themselves," added John Yazwinski, director of Father Bill's Place. "We're in a crisis right now. It's very frustrating. We all know we need more affordable housing, but we need to keep the pressure on state systems so we can build on existing programs. I think the situation can eventually be resolved if we get the support we need from the state and from our communities. All these people who are homeless are our neighbors, our friends."

Eliot Binder, director of Carolina Hill in Marshfield, said his shelter is 100 percent full seven days a week, 365 days a year. "It's taking people a long time to move out because there's nowhere for them to go. I don't see any increase in housing stocks. If it's out there, I'm not being told about it."

He added "This situation really isn't a happy story. And what the public has to realize, especially during the holidays, is that there's a whole other group of people out there on the streets who aren't really living the American dream."

Old Ship Labyrinth open on New Year's Eve

The Old Ship Labyrinth will open specially for New Year's on Sunday evening Dec. 31, from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Admission is free and all are cordially invited to attend individually, with companions, or in groups. The Labyrinth is located in the Old Ship Fellowship Hall across from the church at the rear of the Parish House, 107 Main Street in downtown Hingham.

The process of "walking the labyrinth" is meant to be an individual meditative experience. There are no religious services at the Labyrinth, although there is contemplative musical background to accompany walks.

One walks by beginning at the entrance on the perimeter following a path to the center, then retracing the winding path to the entrance. How quickly or in what spirit one walks and what one experiences during the walk differs with each walk and each person. Some walks may evoke a sense of healing or oneness. Others may simply be pleasant, relaxing walks.

At Old Ship the Labyrinth is patterned into a terrazzo floor; the design is based on the labyrinth constructed in the 13th century French Cathedral of Chartres as part of the tradition of religious pilgrimage. Though that context was of course Christian, labyrinths of other designs can be found in many traditions. Walking a labyrinth, therefore, can be understood as a path of contemplation or prayer for people seeking the Divine or seeking peace without regard to any particular religious tradition.

Public access at the Old Ship Labyrinth is regularly scheduled on the second Tuesday of each month. Following the New Year's Eve special opening the first regular monthly session is planned for January 9, 2001. For additional information please contact the Old Ship Parish Assistant at (781) 749-1679.

field time with the high school soccer and field hockey programs. With the loss of Lillard Field, the high school football team will also have to find a new practice field, and more than likely will have to shoehorn themselves onto the 300-yard by 150-yard Milliken Field.

In the spring, baseball, softball, soccer and lacrosse will compete for space.

Other available town-owned fields include a small field behind the Deer Hill School, Barnes Field on North Main Street — which is used primarily for Little League — Beechwood Field, and Alumni Field.

This winter will definitely be a lesson in deal-making. "We're going to get all the groups together in the winter, including the schools, and try to schedule around each other as much as possible," Worley said.

"It's going to be very challenging three years for us to accommodate everyone," said Cohasset Youth Soccer president Wallace St. John.

One possibility Worley is looking at is moving more activities to Beechwood Field. "That again is primarily a baseball field," he said. "And it's kind of remote on the other side of town. But that's a possibility to move more over that way."

Unfortunately, said Worley, the space crunch might delay the expansion of the town lacrosse program. "We had wanted to expand lacrosse this year to girls, and also expanding the grades, but we may not be able to do that," he said.

St. John said he has placed a "moratorium" on any new soccer teams until the scheduling problems have been worked out, and as asked the town lacrosse club and high school athletic department to do the same.

However, the extra use of fields will require extra maintenance.

"One of the problems with field use is you need to go in every year and re-sod and upgrade and keep them playable," Worley explained. "When you start overusing the fields, the problems compound a little bit every year, and you have to be do a little more in ways of maintenance."

Haddad said an extra $25,000 will need to be added to this year's field maintenance budget, and another $50,000 a year for the next three years. He said the money will be used for such things as reseeding, fertilizing, new sod and other improvements to the Deer Hill field. The infield at Milliken Field will also have to be rebuilt each spring after fall sports.

"The problem we've created is that none of these fields have any downtime," St. John explained. "Downtime allows them to recover as we irrigate, fertilize and seed. They don't have time now...We're going to have to address these issues so we that we won't have big mud bowls during the next three years of renovation."

Even after construction is finished, and Lillard Field opened once again, St. John said there still will be a field shortage problem. "We already had a shortage before we gave [the fields] up," he said. "There's already a demand for teams to accommodate more kids.

"As a town we're going to have to address this bigger issue. We were short before we started and if the school population keeps growing, we'll need even more fields when finished."

Police join 'No Place for Hate' initiative

By Mary Ford
MARINER STAFF

Police officers spend a lot of time dealing with crime and its prevention.

And while hate crimes are nothing new — increased police awareness about not only what constitutes a hate crime but also what to do if one occurs is a new focus for the department.

Cohasset police joined their counterparts in about 180 communities across the state in distributing to officers cards containing hate crime information for law enforcement that can be attached to a clipboard.

In a ceremony at Town Hall last Thursday, Susan Etkind president of the Cohasset/PSO Diversity Committee that led the initiative sponsored by the American Defamation League, said the town should be proactive in its approach to such crimes.

"It's nice not to hold this on an emergency basis because something happened in our town," said Etkind, adding it's better to be able to plan the town's response to hate crimes if they do occur.

The Town Hall event that included members of the school department, clergy, town officials and police is one of several that will be conducted as part of the town's pledge as "No Place for Hate," a program backed by the ADL.

Etkind said the "No Place for Hate" proclamation signed by selectmen chairman Tom Callahan last spring will be blown up and placed in various locations around town for people to sign as a show of support. She said ADL originally battled anti-Semitism but has broadened its focus to all types of hate crimes.

Police Chief Brian Noonan offered to put the pledge on the police website.

"The police department fully supports this effort 100 percent," he said.

Noonan explained that while hate crimes are relatively rare in Cohasset, the department would try to line up more training for officers.

Definition of a hate crime: A criminal act against a person or property in which the perpetrator chooses the victim because of the victim's real or perceived race, religion, national origin, ethnicity, sexual orientation, disability or gender.

The ceremony also included questions and comments from the audience.

In response from a question from First Parish Church pastor Jennie Justice, Sgt. Robert Jackson — who serves as the police department prosecutor — said verbal abuse and ethnic slurs may rise to the criminal level if they reach a point where threats are involved.

Det. Rick Grassie, the town's hate crime officer, said song lyrics espousing hate and violence can lead to actual crimes.

"If a teenager spends enough time with the music, it can have an impact," he said.

Mike Gill, school health education director, said it's important to make children aware there are hate crimes out there. He also said over the past several years the schools have beefed up efforts in character education.

The Hate Crimes Response Card includes factors to be considered by responding officers such as looking for signs, symbols or words indicating the crime was motivated by hate and whether the victim is in a minority in the school or neighborhood. Strategies for police include being prepared for an emotional response from the victim and having the names and telephone numbers of victim assistance organizations available.

Jackson said police investigated a hate crime several months ago that included graffiti scrawled on the victim's garage door targeting at the victim's perceived religion. The perpetrator, who was out on probation at the time on another matter, was prosecuted and is back in jail, Jackson said.

The mission of PSO/diversity committee, established in 1995, is to be a resource for information, facilitate education and to work with other community groups to promote an atmosphere of tolerance and an appreciation for diversity in town.

Cohasset is a "No Place for Hate" community and as part of that effort, police officers will now carry cards that can be attached to a clipboard and contain hate crime information for law enforcement. Local officials and police kicked off the initiative at Town Hall last Thursday.

Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti gives a $1,000 check to Cohasset Police Chief Brian Noonan for the town's PALS program (Police Assisting Local Schools).

Police get $1,000 PALS grant

Norfolk County Sheriff Michael G. Bellotti recently presented a $1,000 check to the Cohasset Police Department for the town's PALS program. Police Chief Brian Noonan accepted the check during a recent visit to the Norfolk County House of Correction.

Bellotti said DARE and DARE-like programs are effective tools in persuading young people to stay off drugs and avoid violence. He said the school/police programs have played a role in declining crime rates.

The sheriff's office distributed $28,000 to DARE programs throughout the county.

Presiding judge reaches out to community

By Rick Collins
RCOLLINS@CNC.COM

Today Judge Mark Coven — the district court though low on the totem poll as far as courts go — is high in importance.

"District courts are the community courts," he said while just minutes away from ending the morning session at Quincy District Court. It's the district courts that deal with local towns' petty thieves and thugs. They deal with the assault cases, the burglars, the drug-users, and the drunks.

It's the district courts that usually see the 17-year old who was arrested with a six-pack of Budweiser in the backseat.

Since being named presiding justice at the Quincy District Court this summer, Coven, 49, has traveled around east Norfolk County, driving to Randolph, Braintree, Weymouth, Milton, Holbrook and Cohasset. He's visited with the towns' school committees, boards of selectmen and other officials to establish community outreach programs that might help curb the increase of juvenile-related offenses.

"I've been traveling, meeting with elected officials to both make the court available to the public, and bring the court out to the cities and towns," he said.

Coven, a 1975 graduate of Boston University Law School, and former deputy attorney general under Jim Shannon, said he hopes to achieve four goals during his meetings:

• raise public awareness to the type of work the courts do;
• have the community understand the types of problems the courts see each day;
• build public confidence and trust in the court;
• build awareness of the laws of Massachusetts.

He has even offered, the use of his courtrooms for school field trips.

Cohasset Police Chief Brain Noonan thinks Coven's efforts could be "very helpful" for the town.

"He also offered the court's team to go to schools and do some mock trials within the school," Noonan said. "I think it would be a great learning experience for students."

"It's always been my contention that we shouldn't respond to crimes after the arrest and conviction, we should attempt to be proactive and prevent crimes in the first instance."
— Judge Mark Coven, Quincy District Court

As an associate justice in Somerville in the early '90's, Coven first exposed students not only to the legal ramifications of crimes, but the physical ones. He helped start the "Brains at Risk" program where students get a first-hand look at victims of brain injuries thanks to drunk drivers. He hopes to continue that program in Quincy. "We'll send people out to Brairitree Rehabilitation Hospital so they can meet with the patients, family and staff and understand the consequences," he said.

Coven said so far, the program has been "quite successful" and been recognized by the Massachusetts Head Injury Association.

"Young people, especially students, have a perception of their own immortality, they think it will never happen to them," he said.

But Coven is all to familiar with motor vehicle accidents involving teenagers. It was Coven who presided over the hearing involving a Cohasset youth charged with motor vehicle homicide following a crash that killed the teenager's friend and Cohasset High classmate just days before the two boys were due to graduate in June of 1997.

Sadly, all judges in Quincy District Court are well-acquainted with the aftermath of motor vehicle accidents involving negligence. In 1999, more than 6,000 motor vehicle criminal cases appeared before Quincy judges, the fifth most in Massachusetts. Quincy court also saw the highest amount of motor vehicle cases involving serious injuries (1,102) and operating under the influence cases (1,036).

Quincy had more than 19,000 charges brought before its benches last year — the fourth highest amount in the state, even more than district courts in Lawrence, New Bedford, Roxbury and Taunton.

Noonan noted that as of Dec. 19, upwards of 200 cases were sent to Quincy District Court from Cohasset this year.

Coven said he also wants to talk about domestic violence, especially in families and dating relationships. "Domestic violence knows no economic bounds, it happens to people of all classes, especially domestic violence," he said.

With only the City of Quincy left to visit, he said the visits have gone very well

"They've been great, I've gotten a great response," Coven said. "The selectmen and school committees have been very welcoming. I think it will be possible to have a very close working relationship.

"I thought it was important to do because we are the community courts. We're assigned to serve the seven cities and towns," he said. "It's always been my contention that we shouldn't respond to crimes after the arrest and conviction, we should attempt to be proactive and prevent crimes in the first instance."

Noonan welcomes Covan's effort to reach out to the towns in the county.

"I think his plan to be involved with the communities is somewhat of a first great effort by a presiding justice, which has been somewhat missing for a while, particularly with the schools," Noonan said. "I think it's incumbent on the schools to take advantage of the offer."

A 'kindness revolution'

Notre Dame Academy students strive to make a difference

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

This continues our on-going campaign to recognize local teens who give back to their communities. Watch for a new Spirit of Community feature each month in Living. We welcome your nominations. Please see our ballot on page 10.

Spirit of Community

The spirit of community is alive and well in Hingham.

Six students from Notre Dame Academy recently proved just that by orchestrating and conducting a major food drive for the Head Start program in Plymouth.

Head Start is not a shelter, but rather, a low-cost day care facility for children ages 2-5. The facility also has an emergency food pantry located in it. There are also chapters of Head Start located in Marshfield and also in Pembroke.

"I'd say (the Notre Dame food drive) brought us about $2,000 worth of food—Those girls are wonderful."

Lori Nelson, Head Start coordinator of social services

"I'd say (the Notre Dame food drive) brought us about $2,000 worth of food," said Lori Nelson, coordinator of social services at Head Start in Plymouth. "Those girls are wonderful."

The six students who thought of and implemented the food drive were NDA seniors Amanda Cadin of South Weymouth, Caitlin Foley of Scituate, Beth Gosselin of Hanson and juniors Becky Murray of Milton, Anna Roche of Cohasset, and Suzanne Timmons of Norwell.

"We did this because we saw the need," Gosselin said of the food drive. Gosselin explained the idea for the food drive started one week last June when she and the a group of fellow NDA students took part in a week-long charity retreat called the Gospel Road program.

During that week, all the students who participated in the program volunteered their time to work at places like Father Bill's shelter in Quincy, the Catholic Charity Guild food pantry in Brockton, and of course, Head Start in Plymouth.

"When we walked into the food pantry at Head Start, all we saw was like two cans of food and a box of cereal," Cadin said of the first visit to the facility."

"We also saw the little children who were there at the day care," Foley said. "They were just so sweet and they were crying out for attention and help."

After the Gospel Road retreat ended, Cadin, Foley, Gosselin, Murray, Roche, and Timmons all got together and agreed that they wanted to help stock the shelves at the Head Start food pantry.

"I had a natural high when we were doing this. I think we all felt a little bit better about ourselves. And I think one of the best parts about this whole thing was that we got it going ourselves. It gives us all a sense of accomplishing something."

NDA senior Beth Gosselin of Hanson

"It seemed like they were affected by the place when they were in here for the first time," Nelson said. "They actually told me that they thought the food pantry needed a lot of help."

When school started in September, the six students got going on their plan to help out. First, they all wrote a letter of what their intentions were in terms of the project. They were asked to present the plan to a board comprised of Notre Dame vice-principals and also the campus ministry.

"We wanted to do it through the school because we wanted everyone to help us out," Gosselin said. "We knew there would be people at the school who would help us."

"The presentation the girls gave to the board was fantastic," said Kathleen Walter, public relations coordinator at Notre Dame.

After the food drive was approved by campus officials, a plan was put into action by the six girls.

"Each of us took on different age groups in the school and assigned them different foods to bring in," Roche said. For instance, Roche and Foley were in charge of assigning

Breaking new ground

Weymouth singer brings her own style to today's music scene

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

Jodi Griffith has always had a passion for playing piano and a knack for writing her own music.

Now, Griffith, a 29-year-old Weymouth resident, is working hard to promote her debut album "There's Only One You."

"I like a lot of different styles of music, but I guess you could say my writing style is progressive rock," Griffith said. "I guess you could say my music is like a combination of Tori Amos and Yes. It's hard to pinpoint it though—you have to just hear it. It's complex and it's got a lot of different time changes."

"All the songs on the album are songs people can relate to — They all send some sort of message."

Song writer Jodi Griffith

Griffith said she plays piano, keyboards, and sings on her album. She said she is also trained in violin, but she did not feature that instrument on "There's Only One You."

And Griffith shares her talent with others. She teaches a violin class through the South Shore Conservatory in Hingham, and also conducts private classes.

But mainly, Griffith is someone who enjoys making music and giving it to the people. She said "There's Only One You" is an album which reflects that enjoyment, but the album is also semi-autobiographical.

"It's a seven-song CD,"

Perfect prime rib

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Prime rib is an expensive cut of meat, running up to $50 for just one roast that feeds six to eight adults. Yet it often turns out dry on the outside, the flavor is often bland, and the texture can be "wet" and flabby. For this much money and with your holiday guests expecting a first-class feast, prime rib ought to be worth the money.

Before I began the cooking tests, I explored the various cuts of prime rib. Beef has 13 pairs of ribs: the first five come from the front of the animal, which is referred to as the "chuck," ribs six through 12 come from the "rib" section (from which rib roasts are cut), and the last rib is part of the "loin." Most rib roasts, however, and the best-quality rib roasts are usually cut from ribs 10 through 12 and are referred to as "loin end" (this part of the rib section is closer to the loin of the animal) or "first cut." These roasts are less fatty than roasts taken from ribs six through nine, and they have one large muscle instead of overlapping muscles. (In previous taste tests, I had confirmed that "loin end" rib roasts were, in fact, preferable.) Each rib has about 2 pounds of meat, so the last three ribs (10 through 12) provide about 6 pounds of meat, enough to serve at least six adults. At the supermarket, though, I found that roasts varied from 5.5 pounds up to more than 8 pounds, although the average was between 6 and 7 pounds. Keep in mind that supermarkets rarely tell you if a rib roast is "loin end" or not; you may have to ask to find out or request that it be cut to order.

The next question was how to cook it. In many previous tests, I have found that low heat is best for large roasts because it produces more evenly cooked meat - the outside does not dry out by the time that the inside is up to temperature. This was the case here as well. I started with a 200-degree oven and also tested 225 degrees and 250 degrees. When cooked at the high end of this range, the meat began to tighten and was a bit too chewy; at the low end, the meat was fine, but it took a long time to cook. I settled on 225 degrees and cooked the meat for about 25 minutes per pound (a 6-pound roast takes about 2 1/2 hours), or until the internal temperature reached 130 degrees in the middle. Please do not cook the meat to 140 degrees or higher as this will ruin a very expensive piece of meat.

Knowing that many ovens set to 225 degrees will actually be hotter or cooler and that even small variations in temperature can affect cooking time, I wanted to provide a means of checking the progress of the roast. At 1 1/2 hours, check the internal temperature of the meat (measured at the center of the roast with an instant-read thermometer); it should be 80 to 85 degrees. If below 80 degrees, increase the oven to 250 degrees, and if at 90 degrees or higher, decrease the oven to 200 degrees.

I also found that the roast needs to be browned on top of the stove before cooking to increase flavor and color. A large skillet or roasting pan works well. Be sure to liberally salt and pepper the roast before starting the recipe.

Now that the cooking method was clear, I wanted to test the notion of aging the meat in the refrigerator. Dry aged meat, the sort that can be purchased from an outfit such as Omaha Steaks, has a distinctive ripe flavor. While I am not a fan of this style, I have found that aging in the refrigerator increases flavor without overdoing it. To determine the benefit of this method with prime rib, I cooked a fresh roast, a roast aged for three days, and a roast aged for one week. The winner? The fresh roast was wetter and "squishier" than the others. The three-day roast was good, but the one-week roast was even better, with a nice texture and deep flavor. (This roast also lost 1/4 pound of its weight to dehydration.) Still, three days of aging is fine. To age beef at home, place the uncovered roast on a cooling rack on top of a jelly roll or roasting pan. Once the meat is aged, trim away the dark, dehydrated areas.

So for an outstanding, restaurant-style prime rib, purchase a "loin-end" roast, age it for at least three days uncovered in the refrigerator, and roast at 225 degrees for about 25 minutes per pound, or about 2 1/2 hours for a 6-pound roast.

PERFECT PRIME RIB ROAST

Purchase a rib roast from the loin end, which includes ribs 10 through 12. Most rib roasts run to 6 or 7 pounds. You should allow 1 pound per person. If you have time, age the roast in the refrigerator for at least three days prior to cooking. (See directions below.)

1 (3-rib) standing rib roast (about 6 1/2 pounds) cut from the loin end (ribs 10 through 12)

Salt and freshly ground black pepper

1. If you have time, place the roast uncovered on a cooling rack on a jelly roll pan in the refrigerator for 1 to 7 days.

2. Adjust oven rack to a low position and heat the oven to 225 degrees. Remove the roast from the refrigerator and trim away any dark, dehydrated surface areas. Liberally season with salt and pepper on all sides. Heat roasting pan or large skillet over medium-high heat. When hot, brown the roast on all sides (using a long meat fork to help hold it in unbalanced positions) until it turns a dark caramel color and about 1/2 cup of fat is rendered, about 8 minutes.

3. Remove roast from pan and place on a rack in roasting pan. Place in oven and roast for 1 1/2 hours, after which time internal temperature should be 80 to 85 degrees. If internal temperature is low, increase oven temperature by 25 degrees; if it is higher than 90 degrees, lower the oven temperature by 25 degrees. Cook the roast for approximately 1 hour longer, or until internal temperature is 130 degrees (for medium-rare), approximately 25 minutes per pound. Let stand for 20 to 30 minutes and carve by cutting away the meat from the bones, placing the meat on the cutting board cut-side down, and then slicing.

Serves 6 to 8.

Vertical Limit (C)

Just what you wanted for the holidays: a movie in which everybody is frozen nearly stiff for two hours, hanging from precipices and/or falling to their deaths while making quite a racket of it on their way down. Well, for (an acknowledged but maybe inflated or deflated) 90 million dollars, you should get more than a paltry one or two chills and spills, and by that measuring stick — shudder and gasp per dollar — "Vertical Limit" delivers its share. It's best at the opening scene, one that for a brief moment resembles the opening shot of "Mission Impossible II," with Tom Cruise hanging from a zillion miles up upon a jagged cliff. Here we have Peter Garrett (Chris O'Donnell), his sister Annie (Robin Tunney) and their father (Stuart Wilson) climbing an awesome thing in the golden west. All of a sudden, a backpack comes tumbling down, just missing them, then screaming people, one after another, plop, plop, plop, pow! And then the whatchamacallit holding our three Garretts to the face of the rock begins to lose its grip, and dad yells to Peter: Cut the rope! Cut it! Annie screams: No! No! Peter is torn. Dad says: You'll kill your sister if you don't! It can't hold all three of us! Cut it! Cut it! (Eventually Peter reaches for his knife … and I wanted to go home at that point.)

No such luck. Three years later Peter is a magazine photographer and Annie is caught up in mountain climbing, but they have Unresolved Issues — you're smart enough to guess whether Peter cut the rope — and she's about to go up K2, the world's second highest mountain, and harder than Everest (Mount Cook in New Zealand was the stand-in), along with a nasty entrepreneur (Bill Paxton) and a nice guy, while what looks like a whole village of gawkers and fancy gizmo operators watch from below. There are also a couple of Pakistani army officers who speak, alternately, Arabic and British English, when they're not firing rockets at India. How many moviegoers have even heard of Pakistan, much less know that it and India are at intermittent, endless war? Never mind: The movie is respectful toward Muslims, and besides, the Pakistanis have nitroglycerine with them, which comes in handy soon.

Flash ahead: Annie and her companions are in terrible trouble, and Peter and a gutsy handful (including a hermit played by Scott Glenn — I thought it was David Carradine. I kid you not) go up in a rescue party, and many die, and several explosions — remember that nitro — punctuate the action, and it is cold, very cold, be very afraid of the cold, and people say extraordinarily dumb things (blame the screenwriter), and O'Donnell has brought his hairdresser up the mountain with him because no matter how tormenting the action, he always looks just swell. Aside from Tunney, there's also Isabella Scorupco as a babalicious nurse, who's along for the climb. Both women are stunningly made up; maybe sub-zero temperature is good for the complexion. Some good people live, some die, every issue is resolved, a moment of silence, now, for the frozen dead. All in a by-the-numbers day's work.

Written by Robert King and Terry Hayes; directed by Martin Campbell. Rated PG-13

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 20

At 6:07 a.m. the Libra moon becomes inactive until 8:12 a.m., when a Scorpio moon takes over. Rather than starting new activities, this day is best for finishing old business, making repairs or corrections. Influences are favorable for tackling jobs that have been troublesome and finding new solutions. Keep an open mind. A lunar alignment to Neptune is in effect between 3:24-6:24 p.m. and may bring a lull period in the day. Plan a quiet evening. Look within for answers.

THURSDAY, DEC. 21

The Winter Solstice arrives at 8:38 a.m., when the sun enters the sign Capricorn. The moon continues its travel in Scorpio, generating a serious, intense mood. Tackle projects that require mental focus and attention to detail; you can get them out of the way. Put major enterprises or decisions on the back burner until next week. A lunar alignment to Uranus at 6:19 p.m. may disrupt the flow of the day. Slow down. Plan a quiet evening. Prayer and meditation can help you to gain deep, penetrating insights.

FRIDAY, DEC. 22

Wake up in a good mood. The Scorpio moon opposes somber Saturn at 7:28 a.m., when it becomes inactive. Focus on the positives and count your blessings. A harmonious alignment of Mercury and Mars promises a productive morning. Be sure to have a clear plan of action and stick to it. Influences turn around completely at 4:57 p.m., when the moon enters optimistic Sagittarius. The planet Mercury enters Capricorn at 9:03 p.m., remaining there until January 10. A lunar opposition to Jupiter makes this evening prime for partying. Forget your troubles and go for the good times.

SATURDAY, DEC. 23

A Sagittarius moon continues to generate a festive mood. The planet Mars moves into Scorpio at 9:38 a.m., remaining there until February 14. Influences are prime for handling last-minute holiday preparations, tying up loose ends. A lunar alignment to Pluto at 7:11 p.m. may stir up deep feelings, memories. On the other hand, an alignment of Venus/Uranus makes this an exciting, 'anything can happen' evening. Be more spontaneous; go with your joyful side.

SUNDAY, DEC. 24

At 5:03 a.m. the Sagittarius moon forms its last alignment to a planet and becomes inactive. No major planetary activity occurs thereafter. That means that this is a day to relax, kick back and enjoy. The Sagittarius moon continues to generate an upbeat, optimistic, festive mood. Get in the swing of holiday fun and games.

MONDAY, DEC. 25

A potent new moon/solar eclipse sets the stage for a most unusual holiday. At 3:54 a.m. the moon enters the sign Capricorn, and the new moon culminates at 12:22 p.m. Its influence brings new opportunities for personal growth and gain, particularly for people who are celebrating their birthday in this period. However, the timing and location of this eclipse also brings new hope and possibilities for everyone on a deep, spiritual level. Open your heart to higher visions. Give the gift of love.

TUESDAY, DEC. 26

After yesterday's powerful eclipse, planetary action winds down considerably. The moon continues active travel in Capricorn, but it forms no major alignments to planets today. However, it will form a harmonious contact to its ruler, Saturn, tomorrow. If you have work projects to accomplish, you can get them out of the way in short time. It is okay to start new activities or make decisions, particularly regarding career or business.

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 27

This is a day to finish old business, handle routine chores and errands, clean up and reorganize. The Capricorn moon becomes inactive at 5:52 a.m. until 4:25 p.m., when an Aquarius moon takes over. Take it slow and easy this evening; don't make waves. There is a rough spot in effect between 7:50-10:50 p.m., when the moon and Mars align. Give others lots of freedom and space.

THURSDAY, DEC. 28

An Aquarius moon all day may point you in directions you do not normally travel. Be open to new ideas and willing to try new experiences. All group efforts, community endeavors, team sports get the green light. You can be most productive if you work with others to achieve a common goal; brainstorm, network, collaborate.

FRIDAY, DEC. 29

A 90-degree contact of Venus and Saturn takes center stage today. This alignment culminates at 5:35 p.m. In addition, the Aquarius moon interacts with Venus and Saturn until 6:47 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Sidestep feelings of self-doubt, fear or frustration. Go out of your way to pacify loved ones. Be more forgiving, loving, nurturing. Instead of worrying about situations that are out of your control, focus on matters you can do something about. Hard work and commitment will pay off.

SATURDAY, DEC. 30

The moon enters the last sign of the zodiac, Pisces, at 5:27 a.m., traveling there throughout the end of this year. Today the moon interacts with Jupiter in the morning and Mars in the afternoon. Creativity and artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. Create or appreciate music, art, photography, dance. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action until next year.

SUNDAY, DEC. 31

A 90-degree alignment of the moon and Pluto warns you to avoid morning hassles or the blues. Focus on the positives and count your blessings. The moon continues to travel in the sign Pisces all day. In addition, an applying 90-degree alignment of Mars and Neptune makes this a holiday weekend to kick back, relax and mellow out completely. Take quiet time out for yourself; reflect on and learn from past experiences. Strive for greater spiritual vision.

freshmen to bring in toothpaste, toothbrushes, soap, and conditioner. Murray was in charge of getting sophomores to bring in paper goods, cleaning products, and paper towels. Timmons got the juniors to bring in crackers, rice mixes, sauces, cereal, and pasta. Gosselin and Cadin led the way for seniors, telling them to bring in things like snacks, juice boxes, and salad dressings. The girls said all food was due on Oct. 13, the same date as the annual Notre Dame walk-a-thon.

"We thought people would forget to bring in their food because of the walk-a-thon," Foley said. "But the turnout was better than we expected."

The morning of Oct. 13, Timmons borrowed her parents' truck so she could park it in the front of the school, and let people fill it up with food. Students at Notre Dame had been instructed to put their food donations in the truck before they checked in for the walk-a-thon.

"When we checked the truck that morning, we saw that it was loaded with food," Cadin said. "We actually had to take items out of there and put them in other cars."

From there, the truck and other cars full of food and other goods were brought down to Head Start by the girls.

"Lori Nelson was amazed when we pulled up," Gosselin said. "She actually started crying because she was so happy."

"It was like two truckloads of stuff," Nelson said. "To me, that was just unbelievable, amazing. You don't see too many high school students doing things like that on their own time. When they got here with all the food, I though they were going to just drop everything off, but they came in and did things like reorganize the shelves."

"After this was over, I found that I was really impressed with my peers," Timmons said. "I looked at all of them in a new way, just because I saw how much people appreciated what we did."

"I didn't realize how much bringing all that food down there meant to (Nelson)," Roche said.

"I had a natural high when we were doing this," Gosselin said. "I think we all felt a little bit better about ourselves. And I think one of the best parts about this whole thing was that we got it going ourselves. It gives us all a sense of accomplishing something."

"Not only did we get something out of it, but many others did," Murray said. "I just figured that by doing this, we could show others how they could help others as well. Maybe we'd all be able to start some sort of kindness revolution."

All the girls said they want to continue to keep community service in their lives, even when they go to college.

"People need to realize that people are hungry everywhere," Timmons added. "And hunger problems will always exist unless people do something about them."

"I, along with others (at Notre Dame) are very impressed with these girls not because what they did was unique, but because they took it upon themselves to initiate such a large project," Walter said. "They conducted themselves in a business-like, professional manner at all times. And the only reason they did it was because they cared about the people they were doing it for.

Griffith said. "Many of the songs were written years ago. Basically, the whole CD is certain sections of my life compiled."

The album holds songs like "She," which is about Griffith's best friend. It also has songs addressing world issues such as "Torch," and songs about accomplishing goals like "Find A Way."

"All the songs on the album are songs people can relate to," Griffith said. "They all send some sort of message."

But the actual formats and styles of the songs are what make them unique—Griffith's sound is one which blends the traditional sound of classical piano with heavy guitar chords.

Griffith's music has been described thus: "delicate and introspective, her piano playing interacts with a razor rock guitar edge. These elements beautifully contrast and consummate with the fire of (Griffith's) impassioned vocals. The final product breaks new ground and creates an unexpected new genre of music."

"I write songs in various ways," Griffith said. "Sometimes I'll just be driving, and I'll get an idea for a lyric," Griffith said. "Other times, songs just come when I'm playing the piano. I'll come up with chords and I'll say to myself, 'Now where is this song going?'""

It took a lot of hard work, time, and moving around for Griffith to get where she is now.

"I've been singing since I was about eight," she said. "I started playing violin at the age of 10, and then at 14, I started playing piano. Over the years, I kind of got into songwriting by developing my craft."

Griffith grew up in Pennsylvania, and she remained there until the age of 20, when she decided to go try her music out in New York. But she did not stay there for long.

After she decided she wanted to further her musical ability, Griffith decided to go to Berklee School of Music in Boston after her short stint in New York. And so she did.

After attending Berklee for two years, Griffith packed up and decided to head to California to market the songs she had been writing over the years.

"I really didn't trust anyone out there," Griffith said. "I always got the feeling I was going to get ripped off."

A short while after she moved to California, she decided she would rather record her material in New York, and so she went back east to do so. That was two years ago.

"I thought it would be cheaper to record the songs I had in New York," Griffith said. "And I felt the studios in New York were more equipped to handle my songs."

It didn't take Griffith long to record her whole album. But after she finished it late in 1999, she decided that Massachusetts would be a better place to market the album.

So once again, Griffith returned to Massachusetts and settled herself in Weymouth. Right now, Griffith is in the process of trying to find a new bass player to work with, and then she hopes to set some concert dates around the area.

"I want to get out there as soon as possible," she said.

Griffith she wants to continue to play and write music, because she said for her, it's not a complicated process. She said part of the music business is about writing simple songs with excellent lyrics.

"I write songs in various ways. Sometimes I'll just be driving, and I'll get an idea for a lyric," Griffith said. "Other times, songs just come when I'm playing the piano. I'll come up with chords and I'll say to myself, 'Now where is this song going?'"
Song writer Jodi Griffith

"The Beatles weren't really monster musicians but they wrote the hell out of their songs," Griffith said. "A good song is based on the way lyrics are and the way the chords are formed. For me, I like artists who write weird sorts of things—things that make you think."

For more information on Griffith, e-mail her at Jodigriffith@aol.com or check out her website at www.Jodigriffith.com. Her album can be ordered via her e-mail or website but it can also be purchased at Tower Records in Boston.

Host has duty to protect party guests from foreseeable harm

By Anthony Summers
CORRESPONDENT

December is the month for holiday parties, when we open our homes to friends and share the joy of good cheer. Occasionally, the cheer becomes too good, as the unfortunate homeowner found out in the case of John Pollard v. Laura Powers.

Background

Eighteen-year-old Laura Powers lived at home with her mother. In March 1992, she hosted a birthday party for a friend. Even though mother was out of town visiting relatives in Maine, she had given her daughter permission to entertain a few guests. (How many unchaperoned teenage parties do you know of that haven't gotten out of control?)

How many un-chaperoned teenage parties do you know of that haven't gotten out of control?) Well, this birthday celebration was no exception. The few friends grew to 50, most of whom were underage high school friends.

Well, this birthday celebration was no exception. The few friends grew to 50, most of whom were underage high school friends.

The plaintiff, John Pollard, was a 26-year-old invited guest of Power's 21- year-old sister, Amy. In order to ensure the party's success, Laura Powers had arranged for two kegs of beer which were situated outside on the patio.

During the course of the evening, four stoned and intoxicated uninvited men arrived, and as they were behaving in a "loud and obnoxious" fashion, soon became personae non gratae and were requested by the plaintiff to behave or leave. Wrongfully indignant at being asked to calm down, one of the interlopers crept up behind the unsuspecting plaintiff and "sucker punched" him, causing serious injury.

Now, you might think that Pollard would seek redress and compensation from the punk who attacked him. Well, if that's what you guessed, you were wrong. Pollard sued Laura Powers under a theory of social host liability.

Anthony Summers

Discussion of law

A social host owes a duty to her guests to protect them from foreseeable harm. In other words, in order to find Powers liable for Pollard's injuries, he must first demonstrate that she beached her duty to protect him, and secondly, that the type of harm he sustained was foreseeable.

Decision

Surprise — this case has not yet reached a final decision, and like the Gore-Bush litigation, it is traveling from court to court. At the present time, the case has been sent back down to the Superior Court by the Appeals Court, with instruction that the case be tried before a jury. It is clear that Powers owed all of her invited guests a duty to protect them from foreseeable harm. The question for the jury will be — was the sucker punch visited upon Pollard foreseeable by Powers? What do you think?

Legal advice

The area of social host liability is a growing area of the law. When you serve too much alcohol to your party guests, you might very well be liable for injuries or damages caused by the over-indulged party-goer.

HUD-approved seminar for first-time buyers

Conway Financial Services and Neighborhood Housing Services collaborated to sponsor a workshop recently for first-time buyers.

About 50 people learned the best ways to begin their search for a home, shop for a mortgage and utilize loan and grant programs offered by municipalities and non-profit groups.

Debbie Kidd of Quincy-based NHS moderated the all-day seminar, which featured presentations by mortgage originators, attorneys and real estate professionals from Jack Conway Real Estate. Each participant was offered the chance to meet one-on-one with each of the instructors.

The workshop was held at Conway's Hanover education center. The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development approved the curriculum, making participants eli-ensure in 2001 that the MAR is so synchronized and focused that it will move and speak as one on issues such as ensuring private property rights, providing housing opportunities for everyone and overseeing smart growth.

"Housing for everyone . . . is a dream perhaps, but it is possible," said Walsh. "We are the real movers, we keep the economy moving," he said.

In the coming year, the MAR must embrace technology as user-friendly which can enable everyone to do more business, he said.

"We must aid our members in technology and develop a web site second to none," he continued, adding that the most important element is to have fun.

A realtor for 21 years, Walsh has been active in the South Shore Association of Realtors, having served as its president in 1987 and as chairman of several committees, including banking, education, grievance and professional standards.

On the state level, he was treasurer of the MAR from 1997 to 1998, first vice president in 1999 and president-elect this past year. In 1995 and 1996 he served as a regional vice president.

Other MAR officers for 2001 include David Drinkwater of Scituate, who will be president-elect and Peter Casey of Weston, secretary-treasurer.

Drinkwater, elected president-elect for 2001, has been a Realtor since 1986. He is an active member of the MAR Finance Committee, and its Government Affairs, Internet, and International Real Estate Work Groups. Prior to becoming president-elect, he served as a MAR state director from 1997-98, was the state association's regional vice president for the South Shore in 1999, and held the office of first vice-president in 2000.

Drinkwater is a member of the National Association of Realtors Risk Reduction Committee, and is a past president and former treasurer of the Plymouth County Board of Realtors. He is a past chairman of his local Board's Membership and Education Committees, he earned the Plymouth County Board's President Award in 1995 and its Realtor of the Year Award in 1999.

Drinkwater is completing a one-year term as president of the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce in 2000.

Regional vice presidents will be Judy Moore of Lexington, who will represent the Boston region; Amy Greene of South Yarmouth, who will represent the Cape Cod and Islands region; Laura Shifrin of Townsend, the central region; Lois Williams of Boxford, the northern region; Margaret Tomkiewicz of New Bedford, the southeast region; Kelly Lewis-Grossi of Dighton, the southern region, and Susan Renfrew of Bernardston, the western region.

Appointed to the 2001 executive board were Carolyn Chodat of Medway, Joseph Delaney II of Canton, Linda O'Connor of Amesbury and Beverlee Vidoli of Burlington as well as 2000 MAR president Fred Meyer of Cambridge and association executive liaison Carol Shapiro of Stoneham.

David Drinkwater

Before the installation, Meyer assessed this year's activity in the real estate market. Sales to date have not been as high as those of 1999, but this year has been his best year ever in a career spanning 37 years, he observed.

"If you look at the number of sales, they may be down, but prices are up, so realtors are feeling good because their own [dollar] volumes are up," Meyer said.

Safety urged during home heating season

Rising home heating prices this winter could cause more than just a strain on pocketbooks. For people turning to alternative heat sources for heating bill relief — such as wood stoves, pellet stoves or fireplaces — this energy crisis has the potential to increase the risk of fire or carbon monoxide poisonings.

According to the Chimney Safety Institute of America (CSIA), the concern is over people increasing stove or fireplace usage without proper preventative maintenance.

"We are raising the flag that if people have not yet had their chimney or vents inspected, now is the time to take this precautionary step," says Greg Williamson, executive director of the CSIA. "Most people who use their stoves or fireplaces on occasion don't realize that creosote buildup or blocked vents — due to leaves or animals' nests — can cause dangerous problems, such as chimney fires and or carbon monoxide seeping back into a home. We want people to stay safe while they work hard to stay warm."

The most recent statistics available from the U. S. Consumer Product Safety Commission indicate that in 1997 there were 23,800 fires caused by solid fuel heating equipment. These fires resulted in 90 deaths, 130 injuries and more than $171 million in damages. These statistics do not include oil, propane, natural gas or electric home heating appliances or chimneys.

In addition to encouraging that chimneys and vents be inspected on an annual basis, the CSIA also recommends the following winter heating safety tips:

• Make sure alternative heat sources, such as wood stoves or pellet stoves, are properly installed and are operating correctly.

• Only use the fuel specified for the alternative heat source. For wood stoves use wood and for pellet stoves use pellets.

• Install a carbon monoxide detector.

•Check smoke alarms. Smoke alarms hardwired into a home's electrical system should have battery back-ups.

Replace batteries in both smoke detectors and carbon monoxide detectors.

CSIA also recommends that chimney and venting inspections be performed by CSIA Certified Chimney Sweeps.

For more information on chimney safety, or for a list of certified sweeps, write to the CSIA, 8752 Robbins Road, Indianapolis, Ind., 46268, call 1-800-536-0118 or go to www.csia.org.

Home holiday safety reminders

As the holidays approach, the American Red Cross reminds families to use common safety sense throughout the season.

The American Red Cross holiday safety tips pinpoint ways to avoid potential dangers associated with decorating homes and Christmas trees, preparing for holiday parties and decorating with candles.

According to the National Fire Protection Association (NFPA), 21,875 injuries and 3,570 deaths occurred due to home fires in the United States in 1999. NFPA cites December, January and February as the leading months for home fires and home fire deaths.

Leading causes of fire deaths include smoking materials, dangerous child play and candles and nearly 600 fires each year have been started by ignition of Christmas trees.

"Every year, the American Red Cross experiences an increase in fire activity during the winter months," said Kevin O'Connell, Director of Emergency Services at the American Red Cross Massachusetts Bay.

"Families are using decorative candles or alternative heating sources that can cause fires. Many of these fires and injuries can be prevented by taking a few moments to review these safety tips."

Be Careful with Holiday Candles - Keep candles away from decorations or other combustible materials. Don't leave children unattended in a room with lit candles. Keep candles, matches and lighters out of the reach of children. Avoid using candles during parties. Never display lighted candles in windows near exits.

Test Tree Trimmings - When decorating with lights, purchase only those labeled by a testing laboratory. If decorating an outside tree, use only those lights labeled for outdoor use. Don't overload electrical outlets, and always unplug all lights before leaving home or going to bed. Never put electrical lights on a metal Christmas tree.

Keep Christmas Trees Fresh - Choose a fresh Christmas tree and secure it in a sturdy stand. Place the tree away from heat sources and exits, and water it daily. If you purchase an artificial tree, be sure it is labeled as fire-retardant.

Prepare for Holiday Parties - Decorate only with flame-retardant or noncombustible materials. If guests will be smoking, provide them with large, deep ashtrays and check them frequently. After the party, look under upholstery such as couches, between cushions, and in trashcans for cigarette butts that may be smoldering.

Designate a Driver - When attending a party, designate a non-drinking driver. If you are hosting a holiday gathering, be sure there are non-alcoholic beverages for guests who are driving.

Inspect Fireplaces and Wood Stoves - Have your chimney connections and flues inspected by a professional and cleaned if necessary prior to the start of every heating season. Use a sturdy screen when burning fires. Burn only wood - never burn paper or pine boughs. If purchasing a factory-built fireplace or wood stove, select one listed by a testing laboratory, and have it installed according to local codes. If you plan to hang stockings on your fireplace, do not use the fireplace for fires.

Buckle Up - During the holiday months, people travel more than ever. Wearing a seat belt may prevent injury in a motor vehicle collision. Ensure that all passengers are wearing safety belts. Seat children in the back seat of the car and in approved safety seats if younger than six years old, or according to law.

Prepare a Disaster Supply Kit in the event of a winter storm that causes an evacuation - Keep the following items in a safe place:

Non-perishable foods such as tuna fish, canned fruit and peanut butter

Bottled water (one gallon per person)

An ample supply of prescription and non-prescription medications

Coats and Blankets to keep warm

Flashlights and extra batteries

Extra cash

3 Ways to Buy a Home for Less Money

If you're like most homebuyers, you have two primary considerations in mind when you start looking for a home. First, you want to find the home that perfectly meets your needs and desires, and secondly, you want to purchase this home for the lowest possible price.

When you analyze those successful homebuyers who have the experience to purchase the home they want for thousands of dollars below a seller's asking price, some common denominators emerge. Negotiating skills are important, but there are three additional key factors that must come into play long before you ever submit an offer.

This topic has been the subject of extensive analysis by industry experts, and a summary of their findings, and a specific step-by-step purchase plan for homebuyers, can be found in a new special report called "Homebuyers: How to Save Thousands of Dollars When You Buy"

This free report outlines the psychology of how a seller sets their asking price, and gives you 3 simple steps to follow, before you even set foot in a seller's home, which will ensure you are able to successfully slash thousands of dollars off the price of the home you want.

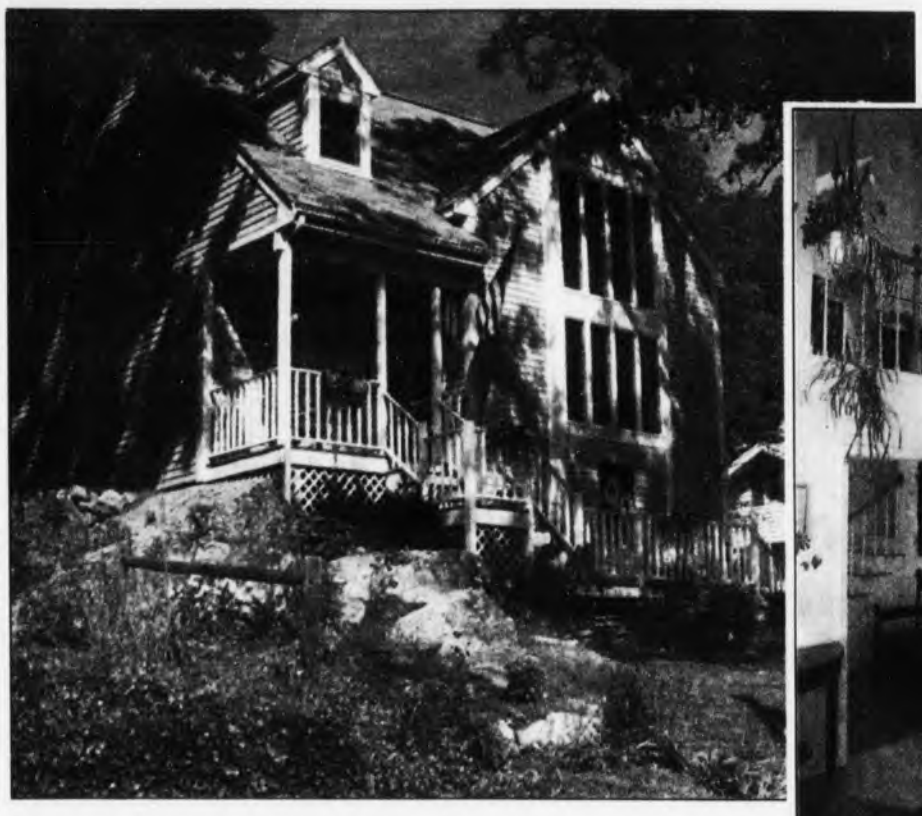
Prime Real Estate



A bird's eye view of Crow's Point

How's this for harmonious living — a contemporary "city living" space with ocean views to boot?

This contemporary cape is situated directly across from Hingham Harbor. The moment you step into the bright foyer with its cheerful sea-blue tile the home is sure to win you over.

Soaring cathedral ceilings accentuate the living room with a much sought after water view. Spanning two stories and with two levels of tall windowpanes, the space features the hardwood floors which cover the entirety of the first floor, as well as a ceiling fan high above.

A sun-drenched dining room offers still more windows on the water. The home's upstairs master bedroom also boasts an impressive view of the harbor.

Massachusetts museums chock full of unusual holiday gifts

For people looking for distinctive holiday gifts, Massachusetts museums offer a treasure trove of options ranging from miniature toy soldiers to reproduction lanterns to elegant mohair scarves. Museum shopping offers respite from the maddening crowds, as well as the chance to take an hour or two out of the holiday rush to explore the exhibits and galleries. Most museums also offer on-line shopping or mail order.

"When you purchase holiday gifts from museums, you are not only buying fantastic merchandise, but are supporting the museums as well," said Mary Jane McKenna, executive director of the Massachusetts Office of Travel and Tourism. "Proceeds from sales directly benefit the educational programs, exhibitions, and conservation efforts of the museums."

Following is a sampling of some of the Bay State's museums and their gift offerings:

Museum of Fine Arts, Boston — New England's largest museum, Boston's Museum of Fine Arts has commissioned artisans from all over the world to create its extensive collection of gifts. A bronzed hourglass ($58) and a boules set ($25) are perfect for men; unusual scarves and shawls are great gifts for women; and there is a whole department devoted to children. The Online Museum shop is also running a $500 shopping spree sweepstakes. Phone: (617) 267-9300. www.mfa.org.

MASS MoCA, North Adams — Housed in a 27-building historic mill complex in the Berkshire Mountains, this multi-disciplinary center of the visual, performing and media arts features everything from contemporary Gallery Benches designed by sculptor Richard Criddle ($420) to an industrial steel bike chain bracelet ($8) in its "Hardware" store. Phone: (413) 664-4481 Ext. 8140. www.massmoca.org.

American Textile History Museum, Lowell — Of special note is the museum's collection of "heirLOOMs," traditional raised weave patterned fabrics woven on vintage looms in the museum's 1950s weave room and made into pillows, tablecloths, placemats, napkins and blankets. The store also features handcrafted textile art and clothing for men, women and children. Phone: (978) 441-0400. www.athm.org

Plimoth Plantation, Plymouth — Also known as "Pilgrim Village," Plimoth Plantation boasts seven different museum shops focusing on everything from period crafts and horticulture to Native Americans and the Mayflower. Gifts ideas include collectible Pilgrim teddy bears ($18.95) and wooden tabletop ninepins for children ($11.95) and pewter spoons ($22.95 each) and earthenware for adults. Mail Order: (800) 262-9356 ext. 8906. www.plimoth.org.

Old Sturbridge Village, Sturbridge — The largest history museum in the Northeast, Old Sturbridge Village has an extensive museum gift shop featuring items made in the village, which recreates life in a rural 19th century village. A redware pancake pourer ($12.95), Bixby bootscraper ($63.95) and Tin Kitchen ($399.95) — a type of reflector oven used to cook meats in a rotisserie fashion over a hearth — are among the unusual items to be found. Also available in the shop and by mail order are foods, toys, craft kits, gardening supplies (such as a large collection of heirloom flower and vegetable seeds), books and other Americana. Phone: (508) 347-0270. www.osv.org.

Concord Museum, Concord — Home to one of the lanterns that hung in the Old North Church the night of Paul Revere's famous ride, the Concord Museum offers an attractive replica of the 1775 lantern ($90) as well as a number of special reproductions and adaptations of American decorative arts from its renowned collection. Phone: (978) 369-5477. www. concordmuseum.org.

Higgins Armory Museum, Worcester — Housed in a Gothic castle, the Higgins Armory Museum features an eclectic section of gifts with a medieval theme based on its extensive collection of arms and armor. Examples include a selection of Baltic Amber, Mail, Celtic and sterling silver jewelry, gargoyles, stuffed animals (dragons and unicorns, of course), sword letter openers, dolls, jester hats and more. For the serious collector, there are steel swords, maces and crossbows. Phone: (508) 853-6015. www.higgins.org.

Museum of Science, Boston — Microscopes ranging from $21 to $105, chemistry lab sets ($36), meteor rocket kits ($21.95) and a wide assortment of other items relating to electricity, dinosaurs, anatomy, earth science and the like are available at this Boston institution which features more than 400 participatory exhibits, a planetarium and a four-story movie screen. Phone: (617) 723-2500. www.mos.org.

The Massachusetts Office of Travel and Tourism is the state agency dedicated to promoting Massachusetts as a friendly, family-oriented destination set in the midst of rich historical and cultural tradition. Nearly 27 million people visit Massachusetts each year with an economic impact of almost $19 billion. Hotel offers fair compensation

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

George Hobica

Q. I visited London recently and stayed at a posh London hotel, the Jurys Kensington. I specifically asked the desk clerk to make sure my name was in their computer system since I would be expecting a few phone calls from long-lost relatives whom I had recently found via the Internet (my mother had cut all ties with her brother back in 1962, but his widow and two sons live in Liverpool and I was to meet them on the only full day I had in England, and I was to meet other relatives as well).

To make a long story short, I didn't receive phone messages or a note dropped off at the hotel from these relatives. I wasn't able to meet one of them at all because of this foul-up. When I learned that the front desk didn't have me as a registered guest, I was furious and at the point of tears.

The manager offered to take one night off the bill and to extend a free two-night stay on the next visit, although I have no plans (or money) to visit England again to accomplish the purpose of my original visit.

I think I'm entitled to more compensation than this. What do you think?

A. Few things are more frustrating than not getting important messages when you stay in a hotel. This happened to me once when I stayed in a cheap hotel in Paris and I vowed never to return or recommend it. But, it's rare for something like this to occur at a four-star hotel like the Jurys.

I contacted the manager, Neil Lane, and he explained that a computer glitch prevented your name from being added to the list of registered guests. The hotel understands your frustration. They've offered to refund your entire two-night stay and to offer a free three-night stay on your next visit to London.

Since you paid approximately $700 for the hotel stay, and the value of your free stay is about $1,000, this seems like fair compensation to me and should provide enough money to buy another ticket to London.

Q. On Aug. 8, I charged four tickets on my Chase Visa credit card for travel to Aruba in February on Air Aruba. The other night, a representative from our travel agent, Trip.com, called to inform us that Air Aruba had gone bankrupt, that our tickets were no longer valid for travel, and that we should consult our credit card company for a possible refund.

I called Chase to dispute the charges but they said that if they can't collect from Air Aruba, then we would be out of luck. They suggested we talk to our travel agent.

Another call to the travel agent suggested we contact the Aruba Tourism Division. They could only suggest we talk to Air Aruba (a vicious circle of blame and misinformation).

Are we out $3,200? Is there something we can do?

A. Aaaargh! Talk about a runaround! I'm dismayed that your dot.com travel agency wouldn't go to bat for you; instead, they passed the buck. I think that had you used a traditional travel agency you would have had better service.

"At least you have a real person to scream at if you use a travel agent," says Carin Weiner of Windsor Travel of Belmont, Mass. "When you deal with the Internet you're on your own most of the time."

It used to be that most credit card issuers would refund your money if you disputed the charges in a case like this within 90 days. Apparently, this is no longer true. I called Chase and Citibank and both informed me that if they can't collect from a bankrupt vendor, then they add the disputed charges back to the customer's account.

There is one exception, however: American Express will protect you in such circumstances if you contest the charges within 60 days of purchase. It's just one of several ways that Amex is a better card (try getting a Visa card replaced on the spot if you lose it, a feat that Amex specializes in).

So, I'm afraid you're out of luck and probably out of $3,200 unless Air Aruba comes up with some money for its unsecured creditors.

Q. I will be going to Europe next summer and I would like to travel to London from Los Angeles on a day flight from the East Coast to Europe. It seems that the only eastbound carrier I can use is United Airlines. Are there other airlines I can use for the eastbound portion of my trip?

A. There are several airlines that offer daylight flights to Europe, including American Airlines, British Airways and Virgin Atlantic Airways. Most leave around 8 or 9 a.m., and get into London in the evening. They're a good way to beat jet lag.

However, in order to connect to one of these flights from the West Coast you'll need to take a red-eye or travel from Los Angeles to New York the day before on a daylight flight and spend the night in New York.

Jet Blue currently offers fares of $258 round trip from Ontario to JFK; you can probably find a decent fare from JFK to London, either online or through a consolidator. It's a nice way to break up a long trip and avoid overnight flights, which can be killers.

Q. I read an article concerning the Normandy region of France that mentioned that four-hour tours of D-Day battle sites can be arranged at the Museum of Peace in Caen. Are these tours still offered, where do they go to and how much do they cost?

A. The Museum of Peace in Caen still offers D-Day tours. From October to May, there is one scheduled tour a day leaving at 1 p.m. for approximately $50. The price includes the tour of Omaha Beach, the Pointe du Hoc, the U.S. cemetery at Colleville-sur-Mer, the German cemetery at La Cambe, the coastal battery at Longues-sur-Mer, the artificial harbor at Arromanches and the British and Canadian sector, as well as the German radar station at Douvres, and admission to the museum.

From June to August, there are two scheduled tours, departing 9 a.m. ($40), and 2 p.m. ($50), which include museum admission. There's a discount for World War II veterans and anyone under 18.

Reservations can be made by calling (33) 2-31-06-06-44 or e-mailing resa@memorial-caen.fr. More information is available through their Web site at www.memorial-caen.fr.

Last minute gifts for gardeners

by Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

A brief reprieve from our extended period of chilly weather created an irresistible urge to put the holiday bustle aside, and for a few short hours, continue the process of putting my gardens to bed. Neglected containers still filled with soil and limp, blackened plants were rescued and stored to prevent their breaking during the alternate cycles of freezing and thawing during the frigid months ahead. Hoses were drained and coiled and sprinklers stored. Frozen ground and mild temperatures offered ideal conditions for clipping and raking the decaying vegetation from the dormant perennial borders. Only hours later, wild weather, reminiscent of summer monsoons, scattered branches and debris throughout the landscape, creating new projects to embark upon once the holiday season has passed.

The leisurely days of browsing for the perfect gifts are over and the time has come to make those last minute acquisitions for friends and family. For the gardeners on your list, there are numerous possibilities to delight and educate both the casual dirt-digger and the passionate hobbyist. Books, magazines, tools, gloves, garden ornaments, and when in doubt, the all-purpose gift certificate to the gardener's favorite nursery or catalog company, should please every gardener.

No matter what the level of expertise, a gardener can never acquire too many gardening references. Gardening books and magazines make ideal last minute gifts and each year there is an ever greater selection from which to choose. For novice gardeners, there are any number of excellent reference books which touch on many aspects of gardening. Better Homes and Garden and Reader's Digest have compiled several excellent texts which cover a wide range of topics. Books on garden or landscape design often enable a new gardener to get off to a good start. Gardeners who have had some experience may have developed specific interests and would welcome references which focus on a particular topic including roses, herbs, perennials or wildlife gardening.

No matter what the level of expertise, a gardener can never acquire too many gardening references. Gardening books and magazines make ideal last minute gifts and each year there is an ever greater selection from which to choose.

Magazine subscriptions are particularly welcome during the dreary winter months to inspire and inform the gardener on your list. "Fine Gardening" is a personal favorite with glorious photography and a list of sources included with each article enabling the reader to obtain the featured items or plants. To place a gift subscription, call (800) 888-8286. For a local touch with gardening information appropriate to the New England area, consider a subscription to "People, Places & Plants," (800) 251-1784, a magazine published in Maine. Subscriptions to both magazines can be obtained online. After my gift orders have been placed, I purchase a copy of the magazine at a local newsstand and wrap this recent issue for the recipient to open.

A membership to the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, (617) 536-9280, makes a wonderful gift as it offers multiple benefits including two tickets to the New England Spring Flower Show with special members' viewing times, a subscription to "Horticulture" magazine, discounts at selected nurseries and the MHS bookstore, free or reduced admission to gardens nationwide and reduced rates on their excellent educational programs and events.

Quality tools are an ideal gift since many gardeners have a tendency to spend their available resources on plant material and purchase inexpensive equipment at discount outlets only to have them bend or break during their first season of use. Well-made trowels, pitchforks, spades and shovels are worthwhile investments and should be available at local nurseries or hardware stores. Perhaps my most valued tool is my Felco pruning shears which I use on nearly a daily basis during the growing season. Clean cuts are a necessity for the health and survival of all plants, trees and shrubs and few pruners can match the quality of the Swiss-made Felco which tends to be the pruner of choice for nearly all professional landscapers and nurserymen. Several styles are available in addition to replacement parts and blades which make these rather costly by-pass pruners a long-term investment.

Most gardeners share a love of nature and wildlife in addition to their passion for plants. Hummingbird feeders, birdfeeders, birdhouses, bathhouses, and birdbaths can be enjoyed by all ages. Reference guides on birds, butterflies, insects, wildflowers and related topics make excellent supplemental gifts.

Last, but certainly not least, is the all-purpose gift certificate to the gardener's favorite local nursery or catalog company. For those of us who passionately collect plants, a gift certificate often alleviates some of the guilt associated with over-spending on plant material. In this time of hectic schedules, this quick and easy solution may be the perfect choice for the gardeners on your list enabling them to purchase plants, tools or garden ornaments they might otherwise do without.

My sincere best wishes to all South Shore gardeners for a happy holiday season. During this busy and sometimes stressful season, take a few minutes to observe the beauty of the winter landscape as you imagine the coming of spring and the beauty of the garden in bloom once again.

Roy, Staszko eye 'high-tech magnet' for air base

Want control over master plan for site

By Mary Ford and Jeanne M. Rideout
MFORD@CNC.COM

Mills Mall officials scarcely had time to pack their suitcases and head back to Virginia before two Cohasset businessmen had put an offer on the table to redevelop the decommissioned South Weymouth Naval Air Station.

The new plans include turning 414 acres of the 1,450-acre site into a "technology campus with a village feel" that would attract the nation's leading high-tech companies and could include office buildings, a 400-room hotel and conference center, restaurants, a daycare center, a small executive airstrip, and an access road from Rte. 3.

The new players — Stephen Roy, co-founder of Hingham-based Intercontinental Energy Corp. and developer Donald Staszko — say they have the expertise, money, and, most of all, love for the area to make a long-term commitment to redevelop the site.

"This could be the single most vital infrastructure development on the South Shore," Roy said. "We want to make it a model for 21st century development."

The men, with the ink barely dry on the business cards of their new company — MassTech Center LLC — presented their proposal last week to two staff members of the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation: executive director Ken Goff and Michael Milanoski, who serves as director of operations and economic development. The businessmen also contacted local newspapers to herald their proposal and met with state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth.

The Development Corporation, which next meets Jan. 11, is made up of two representatives each from Weymouth and Rockland and one from Abington and is charged with the implementation of the redevelopment plan for the former naval air base. The redevelopment plan that was approved by Town Meetings in Rockland, Abington, and Weymouth in the spring of 1998 includes open space, retail, office/research & development, senior housing, and homeless provider services.

MassTech would preserve elements of the reuse plan but wants to amend the mix so there is less retail and more business/office space. According to the plan of the 4.5 million square feet of potential development – 2.1 million was set aside for retail and 1.4 million for business/R&D – MassTech wants most of the retail element moved to business/R&D. MassTech officials say the change is not significant enough to require enabling legislation from the state Legislature.

Stipulations to MassTech's proposal include control over the master plan. In other words, MassTech will work with the Development Corporation, but wants to manage the entire redevelopment plan and would lead the permitting effort. Instead of the mall, the technology center would serve as the "economic engine" for the site. MassTech also wants the go-ahead from the Development Corporation within about 30 days, if possible.

"We're ready to move," Roy said. "We are not interested in a long, protracted process."

Goff said that more definitive information is needed from MassTech before he can say whether the 30-day time period is too ambitious.

"MassTech made an unsolicited presentation to us. That is all they have given us, a presentation with their thoughts. They have not generated a proposal. They need to give us a proposal in writing if they are serious. It all depends on what kind of information they submit to us. We have so many people coming forward, it would be imprudent to be too hasty until we can evaluate all the intentions," Goff said.

Goff will send a list of questions to MassTech this week for the company to address.

The 30-day clock would probably start ticking when the Development Corporation meets again on Jan. 11.

Goff has put in place an in-house review team made up of staff members and consultants to evaluate all projects submitted to him.

"I have put in place a very structured process. Once the information on a project is in hand, I will go before the Development Corporation and give them an overview of what various people are suggesting. Then we will sit back and evaluate the proposals with a cool head," Goff said.

MassTech wants to pick up the ball – so to speak – before the public loses confidence in redevelopment plans for the naval air station.

"This could be the single most vital infrastructure development on the South Shore. We want to make it a model for 21st century development."
— Stephen Roy, president of MassTech Center LLC

"We felt it was important to step forward immediately with ideas and a vision and with the people who have the background and expertise to pull it off," said Roy, who stressed MassTech would be in it for the long haul despite any downturn in the economy.

But changing the zoning laid out in the reuse plan would require approval by a two-thirds vote by town meetings in Rockland and Abington and by the Weymouth Town Council.

MassTech, which would phase the project in over 10 to 20 years, said the benefits of what Roy describes as "Silicon Shore" include: a broad range of well paying, sustainable jobs with benefits; union construction jobs; new tax revenue; and community orientation that includes offering $150,000 in annual matching technology grants to schools in Abington, Rockland, Weymouth, and Hingham.

The company will offer a non-refundable down payment of $250,000 and also $5 million in predevelopment investment on the project that is estimated to cost anywhere from $500 million to $1 billion. The $5 million would be used for work such as obtaining permits and clearing environmental hurdles that would have to occur before a shovel could be put in the ground.

If MassTech's plans seem to have come about quickly on the heels of failure of the Mills Mall proposal, they have. Roy and Staszko said they did not negotiate with the Development Corporation prior to the panel voting to terminate its contract with Mills Mall Dec. 11. In fact they men read about the "death" of the Mall proposal in the local papers. They decided to put their heads together and form a new company after reading that future redevelopment plans might be done on an "incremental basis" that, the men say would be a recipe for "disjointed development." Roy and Staszko stress they want a "Class A" development with architectural continuity.

"We envision a college campus atmosphere with a village feel," said Staszko, an American Airlines pilot, who also owns Cohasset Plaza and the former South Shore Chevy Geo site, both off Rte. 3A in Cohasset.

"We will only get involved if this is a first-class development and is something that is an economic engine for the South Shore, not just a real estate development," Roy said. "We will not get involved unless it provides for the future."

Mills Corporation representative David D'Onofrio said there would have been no reason for the Development Corporation to end Mills' contract to put in a technology center.

"What is being proposed isn't anything that couldn't have gone along with the Mills project. It all could have gone just fine together," D'Onofrio said.

The local activist group COMPARE opposes an access road to the base, but has not taken an official stand on the MassTech idea.

Paul J. Leary, Weymouth Town Council president and a member of COMPARE's board of directors, speaking as a resident, applauded the possibility of bringing jobs with a future to Weymouth and the South Shore.

"I'd like to create jobs that people could make a career of, not some dead-end, low-paying jobs at the mall. That is the primary use of the property," Leary said.

An access road is necessary, but MassTech says it can come up with a better more "environmentally correct" design that what is there now.

Leary said a new design for an access road was critical.

"Nobody cares for the access road as it is currently proposed. I am not opposed to an access road if they can come up with one that is less environmentally dangerous. This will all be part of the study that must be done," Leary said.

Because the environmental study of any route for the access road will be time-consuming, Leary said a 30-day time limit may not be feasible.

"I don't see how the tri-town board can move so fast," Leary said.

Leary added that he was opposed to a connector road that would link Route 3 with the base and continue through the site to link up with Route 18.

The executive airstrip, if it came about, would use an east-west runway, be limited to private aircraft, and have limited hours of operation. MassTech envisions the airport as an attraction to the high-tech companies that might want the option of moving executives and even microchips in and out quickly.

Even though the use of the base as an airport was stormily rejected by residents in the three-town area, Leary said an executive air strip was

HAPPY NEW YEAR

Hello Cohasset! I hope that everyone had a wonderful Christmas and that Santa was good to you all. It sounds very strange to say that 2001 is coming as it feels like yesterday that we were getting ready for the year 2000. Happy New Year to everyone, make sure to make some wonderful resolutions.

HEARTFELT APOLOGY

I wanted to start this column with a big apology. Last week I wrote about the Butman family and their move to Maine. I wrote the wrong name however! Georgine and BRUCE Butman, along with daughter Amelia went to Maine, not Barry who still resides here in Cohasset. I am very sorry for this error and want to wish Bruce, Georgine and Amelia all the best in the upcoming New Year. Barry, I am sorry for this mistake and hope that the New Year will be great for you as well.

DAR HELPS VETERANS

I received a great note about the Daughters of the American Revolution. The Daughters of the American Revolution Colonel Thomas Lothrop, Old Colony Chapter, played Santa Claus to hundreds of veterans at the V.A. Hospital in Brockton. Vice President, Barbara Dillon hosted Christmas Goodies at her home in Cohasset for the DAR Santa Elves who brought gifts and wrapped them for the Veterans. Sunday, Jan. 14, 2001 is the next meeting, again being held at the home of Barbara Dillon from 2-4 p.m.. The program will be a video, entitled "The Mayflower Pilgrims." Refreshments will be served. If you are interested, please call Barbara at 781-383-0025.

COLLEGE FIELD HOCKEY

I had some news this week from Hobart and William Smith College in Geneva, New York. Sophomore back, Neely Wakeman was part of the NCAA Division III National Champion and UCAA Champion William Smith College field hockey team this season. Wakeman was a member of a stifling Heron defense that recorded nine shutouts and allowed 22 goals in 21 games. The Herons finished the 2000 campaign with a 20-1 record! Great work, Neely!

HIGH HONORS

Melissa M . Bates, daughter of Mr. Jeffrey C. Bates of Cambridge, and Ms. Elizabeth M. Bates of Cohasset achieved High Honors for the Fall term at the Kent School in Kent, Conn.. —YEAR IN REVIEW—

Events of 2000 set the stage for Cohasset in the 21st century

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

There were debates on planes, trains and automobiles. Problems arose with schools, sewers and wastewater. People complained about taxes, roads and revitalization.

All in all, there was a little bit of new mixed in with a lot of old.

Cohasset may be mistaken for a serene, little suburban bedroom community by outsiders, but those in town know, if things seem to quiet, just wait a minute. Local history may prove that the year 2000, which was either the first year of a new millennium or last year of the old one (depending on who you believe) was an important mark in time.

More than 1,100 homes are now hooked up to sewers thanks to the completion of the North and Central Cohasset sewer projects this year. The town fought through an impasse with the state and is poised to sign a mitigation deal for the restoration of Greenbush — an agreement that most elected officials believe will adequately protect the town. Ten years from now, residents will be able to enjoy two expanded schools, as well as have new town docks, recreational area on the old Hagerty site, new library and children's museum, town paramedic ambulance service, an expanded Woodside Cemetery, and perhaps two of the best restaurants in the state.

"The year 2000 was a very busy year," said Town Manager Mark Haddad, who very often found himself in the middle of everything. "We've done a lot of good things. I think the taxpayers benefited from their tax dollars. And I think we'll continue to provide good services into the next year."

But though some issues such as sewers and school expansion appear to be resolved, many issues remain up for debate as they have for years, and probably will for many more.

Will restoration of the commuter rail line prove to be the end of the sleepy little harbor town, or be a boon to the town, its commuting residents and property values?

Will Cohasset Heights Landfill remain closed for good and allow John McNabb to get a good night's sleep, or continue to fight for it's right to reopen?

Will seniors have an affordable place to live in town, with manageable property taxes and easy access to the downtown and other shopping areas?

Will the village area ever see a bit of "sprucing up?"

What of Logan Airport expansion and more flights over the South Shore? And increased traffic during Route 3 expansion? And what will the repercussions be from the redevelopment of the South Weymouth Naval Air Station?

And can the town survive without Mary Jeanette Murray in the State House?

All this should make for an interesting 2001.

But as many historians say, in order to understand where we are going, we must look back at where we have been.

January

The year begins with a mini-exodus of town leaders. Twenty-four year state representative Mary Jeanette Murray announces she finally is heeding to her children's wishes, and not running for reelection. The last time Murray didn't run in an election, this reporter wasn't born yet. Her announcement creates the opening many local politicians have been waiting for as the race to replace her at one time features five candidates, including Democrat Garrett Bradley of Hingham whom Murray soundly defeated in 1998.

Selectman Diane Sullivan, often the only dissenting vote in an increasingly harmonious board, also announces she won't be running again in 2000. Ironically, Sullivan, an ardent senior housing supporter, cites the lack of housing and uncertainly of future town residency as reasons for not running again. School Committee member Betsy Connolly also says she won't seek reelection.

The Planning Board creates a bit of a stir when it votes unanimously to ask selectmen to revisit the idea for a downtown commuter rail station. Chairman Al Moore says he doesn't think selectmen took every argument into account when they made its decision in 1996.

Also, the Village Revitalization Task Force, boosted by a substantial donation from Peter Roy and Gerd Ordelheide starts the year off strong by presenting $14 million in suggested improvements to the village and harbor areas at the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce's annual meeting. However, the VTRF would quickly lose steam, and not really be heard from again until the spring.

A mild start to winter changed dramatically, catching a few by surprise. A five-inch snowfall on Jan. 13 resulted in six accidents, and started a bitterly cold trend that saw temperatures dip below zero for the first time in years.

On Jan. 14, the state Department of Environmental Protection gave final approval to the town water commission to build a new water tank on top of Scituate Hill.

February

Cohasset Middle/High School Athletic Director Clark Chatterton was named as Mariner Citizen of the Year. The selection committee cites Chatterton's "genorosity of spirit different.

"I would not object to an executive air strip. I don't see why people would object," Leary said.

Town Council member William B. Barry, Jr., does.

"It can't be trusted to be a small airport with 6,000- and 7,000-foot runways," Barry said. "This is the real reason Mills was killed. A certain group in town has wanted an airport there from day one. If aviation gets in there, there will be pressure to share the regional burden of air traffic. Once we open the base up to air use, the foot will be in the door and we will lose control."

Barry said Weymouth Mayor David Madden would not approve of an air use at the base.

"The mayor has promised me more than once that he would not support an air use. If it does not have the mayor's support, it won't get off the ground," Barry said.

Barry said that it was not necessary to have an air strip to have a technology center.

"Route 128 is high-tech, and there's no runway there. This isn't rocket science," Barry said.

MassTech would also examine ways to recycle the "gray water" off the roof structures and parking areas to provide some of the water for the site.

Roy said the company's goals are not entirely altruistic.

"We expect to make money," he said, "but it would be a win-win for everyone."

Hedlund, the state senator, described the proposal as "an exciting vision" and something he wished had been on the table two years ago.

The Old Man & The Kid

The Kid looked at his watch, an expensive Rolex that had been given him in preparation for his new job, and flicked a speck of dust from the sash that identified him only as "2001."

"You're late," he said impatiently, "You were supposed to be here 20 minutes ago to brief me. Not that I needed it, you understand."

The Old Man leaned his scythe against the wall in the corner of the room and straightened his sash, the one that said "2000," and sat down wearily. He looked at his watch, the battered Timex he had used to record the events of the past year. It really was late.

"I was delayed," he said. "It took me a while to get here. I had to spend most of the last 12 months in Florida of all places. They can't do anything right down there. It took me half a year to get a 5-year-old boy back to his father in Cuba. It took me a couple of months to show them how to count votes correctly. You don't understand . . ."

His voice trailed off until his words were inaudible and his shoulders slumped as though his burden was becoming unbearable. In this attitude, his long white beard brushed the floor.

"What's to understand?" said The Kid. "How difficult can it be to ship a little boy across 90 miles of water? Don't they have machines that can count millions of votes in a few minutes and have results even before the networks? Face it. You just blew it, that's all."

The Old Man started to say something and then changed his mind. The Kid was so fresh and enthusiastic — and so naïve. How do you explain to him how the hatred Cuban exiles in Miami held for Fidel Castro kept Elian Gonzales on tenterhooks for months? How do you explain to him how a little piece of paper called a "dimpled chad" could hold a nation enthralled for weeks?

"But that's all in the past now," The Kid went on. "I'm concerned with the future. In the few minutes we have left, clue me in on what I can expect in the next year so I can get on it right away."

The Old Man watched him with a trace of déja vu, recalling another kid who entered the field with a similar show of confidence only 12 months before. What a difference a year can make!

"Well, you'll have to watch out for the Arabs and the Israelis in the Middle East," he began. "They . . ."

"Wait a minute," The Kid interrupted him. "I thought you settled that."

"I thought so too," said The Old Man. "And so did Bill Clinton. But then, for some reason, the Palestinians started throwing rocks at the Israelis and the Israelis started shooting back and we had to start the whole thing all over again. You'll keep it going for us, eh?"

"Sure," said The Kid but a furrow was starting to cross his brow.

"You'll have to keep a close eye on the economy, too," The Old Man continued.

"Why's that," asked The Kid. "I thought things were going along pretty good."

"They are. But Alan and I thought the market was getting a little soft.

That's why we raised the interest rates. Now George wants to give more than a trillion dollars back to the taxpayers. And he really doesn't get along that well with Alan. Do you follow me all right?"

"Er . . . sure," said The Kid. He was searching his brain for a quick fix but found none and the thought was forming in his mind that maybe, just maybe, there was none available.

"They may have a problem developing up there in Massachusetts, too," said The Old Man. "The governor, Paul Cellucci, may get a cushy job with the Bush Administration and you know what that means."

"No. What?"

"That means the lieutenant governor, Jane Swift, will become governor and she's pregnant with twins and already has had a problem with the Ethics Commission and the polls show that the people don't have much confidence in her. But you can handle that okay, right?"

"I think so," said The Kid, "but maybe you could stick around a little longer, just in case?"

"Sorry, kid," said the Old Man, looking at his Timex. "It's too late."

And he was gone.

Hedlund swearing in

State Senator Robert Hedlund in recognition of his grassroots approach to government, will be moving his swearing in ceremony from the State House to his Senate District.

On Thursday, Jan. 4, at 7:30 p.m. at the Broad Cove Ballroom in Hingham, a swearing in ceremony will be held. Administering the oath to Hedlund, who represents the Plymouth/Norfolk District, will be Plymouth County District Attorney, Michael Sullivan and Senate Minority Leader, Brian Lees.

The event is open to all district residents.

"Bringing this event to the district I represent allows me to share this important day with supporters and constituents. The people who are truly responsible for my success in the recent campaign," Hedlund said.

"It is the hopes and aspirations of South Shore residents that I bring with me on a daily basis to the State House. I am honored that I will be able to begin another term in the company of the people that I represent and not just other elected officials," he said.

COHASSET CARES

The Grinch who stole the Christmas lights

By Marie Caristi
FIRST PARISH GREEN SANCTUARY COMMITTEE

Recently the governor of California flicked the switch to light the state's giant Christmas tree. Several seconds later, he shut the lights off. He was setting an example of environmental responsibility for Californians who are experiencing rolling blackouts. It seems that Christmas lights in Calif., use about as much electrical wattage as 1 million homes using all their regular electricity. Given the severity of the power outages, citizens are being asked to turn their holiday lights on later and shut them off earlier, as well as to observe off-peak use of major appliances, etc. Although the issue at hand was the power outages, this incident also raised the spectre of light pollution itself.

Australians can no longer view the Southern Cross. So-called Dark Sky associations have arisen worldwide to help astronomers. On a somewhat humorous note, there were reports of Californians frightened by the sight of the Milky Way a decade ago during a severe blackout. Many had never seen this gaseous beauty. Many major cities have blackout nights on the known navigation dates of certain migratory species so the birds will find their way safely to their seasonal homes. The pelagic puffin chicks are hand-escorted by the children of Iceland in the middle of the night back to the ocean when the birds become confused by the lights of coastal cities.

Most of us suffer from more common forms of light pollution such as spotlights from a neighbor's backyard that illuminate one's own bedroom more than the backyard they were meant to light. We might also bemoan our lack of visual access to thrilling meteor showers. there is a magnificent picture called Earth Lights on the NASA web site. It is stunning and worth a peek, and as beautiful as it is, it illuminates, shall we say, the problem clearly. Light pollution is probably more curable than any other form of pollution.

First parish Cohasset has recently undertaken the challenge to be a so-called Green Sanctuary, a pilot program concerning all aspects of environmental awareness, and we want to involve the entire Cohasset community. We will be reaching out for assistance in the spring, for example, to make Earth Day, Sunday April 22, a meaningful town-wide celebration.

As a Green Sanctuary congregation, we will be looking for ways to act more responsibly towards the earth. We could begin right now and pretend we are Californians and use our Christmas lights more sparingly. We could also light one or two of those proverbial little candles to celebrate our beautiful, and perhaps we will be able to see the star(s) shining in the East more brightly as our reward.

Safety tips for scooter-users

Many young people and some adults as well, will have received a gift of one of the latest crazes in the United States – a flashy new rendition of the foot-propelled scooter, so popular in the 1950's. Estimates are that 5 million scooters will be sold in 2000.

During January – October 2000, an estimated 27,600 persons sought emergency room care for scooter related injuries. The estimated number of injuries seen in the ER in September was 18 times the number seen in May. About 85 percent of persons treated in ER's were under age 15 and 23 percent were less than eight years. Fractures and dislocations of the arm and hand were the most common injuries. Two persons have died; one, a father showing his daughter how to ride the scooter, fell and struck his head; a six-year-old boy rode into traffic and was struck by a car.

During January – October 2000, an estimated 27,600 persons sought emergency room care for scooter related injuries.

Because these scooters are a recent phenomenon and are unlike the scooters of the 1950's, there are no scientific data relating to the efficiency of protective safety equipment. However, based on data from in-line skating and bicycling, the following recommendations should help you reduce your chances of injury:

Wear a helmet that meets the standard established by the Consumer Product Safety Commission; Use knee and elbow pads; Ride scooters on smooth, paved surfaces without traffic, and avoid streets and surfaces with water, sand, gravel or dirt; Do not ride scooters at night; Young children should not use scooters without close supervision.

The Christmas bird count - a long tradition

A BIRDER'S EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

The Christmas Bird Count, or CBC, is an early winter survey of birds conducted by birders, both amateur and professional. Every bird, whether seen or heard only, is counted, not just the species. The first CBC was held in 1900, so this year's 101st count begins a second century of counts. Frank Chapman is credited with suggesting a Christmas bird census as a replacement for the Christmas "side hunt". This was a competitive event to see who could kill the most animals and birds in one day. It was called a side hunt because sportsmen would choose sides, as in teams. It was Chapman's interest in promoting bird conservation that motivated his suggestion for a different kind of competitive event.

The idea caught on and has grown from 27 observers the first year in 25 counts, mostly in the northeast, to a record 50,000 observers in more than 1,800 counts throughout the US, Canada, South America and the Caribbean last year. People seem to enjoy the camaraderie, the competitive spirit, a chance to bird all day in the middle of the holiday rush, thus carrying on the tradition.

Gradually as the CBC grew in scope and standardized its methodology, scientists began to realize that this great mass of data could show a lot about relative abundance and patterns of distribution of birds. Just how valuable the data are continues to be debated, because there are many variables, including weather conditions, number of people covering an area, and the ability and expertise of the participants. Even such things as the restriction of the use of binoculars at coastal areas during World War II, means that the number of seabirds which could be counted during those years must have been limited. National Audubon Society publishes the results each year, but now the data are all on-line, making them accessible to anyone. As statisticians work on better methods of analysis, perhaps more useful information can be gleaned.

In 1959, some standardization of methods was adopted. Counts now must be conducted in non-overlapping geographic circles 15 miles in diameter. Party-hours have been recorded since the beginning, and now party-miles are recorded as well. Some think that counts of feeder birds and non-feeder birds should be kept separate, and that may well be the next refinement in the methodology. As of this year, the compiler for each circle can choose any day between Dec. 14 and Jan. 5. This is a slight extension of the dates offered in previous years.

Hingham is part of the Quincy circle that includes Hull, Weymouth, Cohasset and Braintree. The date for our count this year was Dec. 16. Observers come to expect cold weather and learn to dress in more layers than they think they could possibly need, knowing they will be out from dawn to dusk. Some go out even earlier to listen for owls. The weather reports leading up to the 16th sounded somewhat ominous with predictions of high winds, rain and sleet. Luckily for us the stormy weather did not arrive until the next day, and we were treated to a day which was not too cold, not very windy and produced only a few sprinkles of rain. Charlie Nims and I joined Susan Shapiro, our leader, and tried to cover as much of Hingham as we could. Michelle LoConte helped us for a few hours in the morning at World's End.

It is impossible to cover all of Hingham in one day, so we try to choose places that are likely to have the most birds. This year as usual we walked all over World's End, then went to Foundry Pond and the Weir River area just below the dam. Hingham Beach, the Harbor area, and Broad Cove gave us gulls, ducks, Hooded Mergansers and Cedar Waxwings. Turkey Hill and the Weir River Farm area had surprisingly few birds, except for one little corner where there were a bunch of sparrows, finches and redpolls. The parts of Wompatuck State Park which we sampled were also pretty quiet. The dump has always been a must for large numbers of gulls and crows, especially Fish Crows, which can only be told from American Crows by their voice. Now that the landfill has been capped, there were almost no gulls and only a few crows, but by listening carefully, we were able to pick out 3 Fish Crows. To our surprise we also found a Ruby-crowned Kinglet, a lingering Hermit Thrush, 2 Field Sparrows, and a Swamp Sparrow in the thickets at the edge of the landfill.

Our tally for Hingham was 55 species, seven more than we found last year, and the total for the whole Quincy circle was 96, two less than last year. The most unusual bird was the Ruddy Duck found off Rocky Neck at World's End mixed in with some Bufflehead. Ruddy Duck are more apt to be found in fresh water, but the local ponds had a lot of ice. Juncos were way down, but I understand there were lots in Athol. It was nice to see Palm Warblers and both species of kinglet, which we did not find last year. For the complete list of what we saw, please see the accompanying box. If you are interested in looking up data, either historical or current, try checking out http://www.birdsource.org/cbc/ on the web and following the links.

Things to come in 2001

The more things change the more they remain the same, as we shall see in the year 2001.

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

JANUARY — George W. Bush is sworn in a president of the United States. Democrats move to appoint a special prosecutor to investigate his drunken driving arrest 20 years ago. "It's a good start," says James Carville, the new chairman of the Democratic National Committee. "Who knows where it can lead."

FEBRUARY — Gov. Paul Cellucci resigns to accept post in U. S. Treasury Department. "They can use my financial skills," he says . . . The Rev. Jesse Jackson obtains Florida presidential election ballots under Freedom of Information Act, says his count shows Al Gore the clear winner despite racial profiling that discarded thousands of African-American ballots.

Unable to find anything new on President Bush's 20-year-old drunk driving arrest, Democrats advertise for a woman, any woman, who knew him when he was a student at Yale.

MARCH — Fleet Bank announces that its coming merger with (fill in the blank) will result in only 27,000 layoffs. Critics hailed the move as good for the New England economy . . . Former President Bill Clinton makes his debut in new job as talk show host, declines to accept congratulations from callers identified only as Gennifer, Paula and Monica.

APRIL — Actor Alec Baldwin says his count of Florida ballots, obtained under the Freedom of Information Act, shows Al Gore to be the real winner so he won't have to leave the country after all. . . The Bruins and the Celtics close their seasons at the Fleet Center — but nobody notices.

MAY — Gov. Jane Swift announces that good management practices by her administration have managed to hold Big Dig costs to only $20 billion . The Supreme Court rules that worshippers cannot use public roads to get to church on Sunday morning because it violates the separation of church and state.

JUNE — Neighbors of the former South Weymouth Naval Air Station rejoice over a proposal to turn the site into a combination state prison, salvage yard and toxic waste dump, "just as long as they keep that mall and access road out."

JULY — Residents of Kyrgyzstan in Central Asia discover that if their country had existed their ancestors would have been discriminated against in America in the 19th century if they had known how to get there, and seek reparations.

AUGUST — Unable to find anything new on President Bush's 20-year-old drunk driving arrest, Democrats advertise for a woman, any woman, who knew him when he was a student at Yale.

SEPTEMBER — Stephen Spielberg releases his latest movie, "The Monica Lewinsky Story," in which it is revealed that it was really Bob Dole on Viagra who chased the buxom intern around the desk in the Oval Office.

OCTOBER — Rush Limbaugh quits his talk show and Matt Drudge folds his web site for lack of Democrats in the Bush administration . . . Red Sox fail to win World Series for 82nd consecutive year, announce plans to raise ticket prices in 2002. Thousands of fans line up to renew season tickets.

NOVEMBER — Supreme Court rules that Florida residents are banned from voting in presidential elections until it is proven that at least a dozen of them can count beyond ten . . . Special Prosecutor Alan Dershowitz says he has located a woman who once spoke to George W. Bush in a New Haven bar 30 years ago, pledges continued probe of serious charge.

DECEMBER — Hollywood jet setters plan a party to celebrate the coming millennium. "It was so much fun the first two times that we decided to do it again," says their press release.

Cohasset Citizen of Year nominations sought

In keeping with its seven-year tradition recognizing an individual for outstanding service to the community or a special achievement — the Cohasset Mariner is now accepting nominations for the annual Citizen of the Year Award.

Here at the Mariner, we invite our readers to take this opportunity to nominate a person who has made a significant contribution to Cohasset. This is a community award: the Mariner is the mean by which we are able to recognize, thank and honor those around us who make the quiet, generous contributions that make our town a wonderful place to call home.

The deadline for nominations for the 2000 Citizen of the Year is 5 p.m., Friday, Jan 5. Please see the nomination form on page 5. The form may be photocopied. Letters of nomination are also accepted and should be mailed or sent by fax to The Cohasset Mariner, 73 South St., Hingham 02043. Our fax number is 781-741-2931.

This is not a popularity contest. Following the close of nominations, a selection panel — after reviewing the names submitted by poring over the nomination letters and comments — will select the 2000 Citizen of the Year, who will be named in January 2001.

Nominees may be someone in elected office, a member of an appointed town committee, teacher or school administrator, clergy member, fire-fighter, police officer or other municipal worker. And the nominee may be a person in the business community, sports figure or an "unsung" neighbor or friend who has freely given of his or her time and energy for a worthwhile Cohasset project or cause.

This year's recipient will be the eighth person honored as the Cohasset Citizen of the Year, joining past recipients:

1993: the late Gerard T. Keating, "Mr. Cohasset.: for his more than half-century of contributions to the community, including serving as chairman of the Council on Aging, chairman of the school committee, president of the hockey boosters club, vice president of the Cohasset Historical Society, director of veterans services, and lector, eucharistic minister and usher at St. Anthony's Church.

1994: Joseph D. Buckley, for his work behind the scenes helping seniors understand the complexities of the healthcare system and to access health benefits through SHINE (Serving Health Information Needs of Elders), his service on the Council on Aging, and volunteer work over the years with the Boy Scouts, Little league, Sunday School and more.

1995: Dr. Robert T. Sceery, for his more than 40 years of dedicated service as a pediatrician in town and school doctor. He also served on the board of health and led the fight back in the 1970s to sewer the town. He is also a familiar figure at town meetings where he speaks his mind on important issues.

1996: The Rev. Gary Ritts, pastor of the Second Congregational Church, for being a positive force for good through his work with the Appalachia Service Project (ASP), an ecumenical volunteer effort involving Cohasset teenagers. ASP is a home building ministry in central Appalachia.

1997: Anna Abbruzzese, for all her volunteer work including preparing and delivering meals for the Pine Street Inn, driving the senior shuttle and coordinating the Gourmet Cooking Club at the Council on Elder Affairs; and her many efforts to help revitalize Cohasset Village through the Farmers' Market and much more.

1998: Katherine Stanton, for her tireless service to the town and its citizens over the years. She also volunteers as a case reviewer for the state Dept. of Social Services, served on the school committee and recreation committee, and along with her family was involved with the creation of the Cohasset Sailing Club.

1999: the late Clark Chatterton, for his generosity of spirit and deep caring for his fellow man, his years of work as a teacher and athletic director at the high school, including innumerable efforts helping others behind the scenes. He also helped raise money for many causes including Alumni Field and the American Cancer Society.

Gymnasts vault into contention

Second win among all-time best for Cohasset squad

By Joe Reardon
CORRESPONDENT

With two wins in its first two meets of the season, the Cohasset/Norwell girls gymnastics team already has a full steam of momentum heading to the Jan. 8 showdown against undefeated Hanover. And while the meet isn't a must-win affair for either team, the victor will more than likely be considered the strong favorite to capture the Pilgrim Conference title.

The Indians are off to an even quicker start out of the gate than the Skippers. Both teams have the same 2-0 record, but Hanover has a higher meet mark with its 131 points.

Cohasset/Norwell head coach Kara Connerty fully expected Hanover to be the toughest competitor so far this winter when she studied the schedule before the season started.

"I think it's going to be a very competitive meet," said Connerty. "They're a tough team with a lot of very good gymnasts. We'll have to be consistent on every event."

The Skippers couldn't be facing the Indians at a better time. Cohasset/Norwell goes up against Hanover on the heels of a monster meet last Thursday when it easily handled league-opponent Carver, 125.75 – 104.7.

Former Cohasset/Norwell coach Ruthann Ardizzoni is still scouring the record books to see just where the score sits on the all-time Cohasset list. At the very worst, Kristin Sheerin and her supporting cast put the third best score in school history in the archives, possibly the second best. The 125.75 is an all-time Norwell record.

Connerty has been preaching consistency to the team since late November and the Skippers were Cohasset, the smallest town in the smallest bracket of the Pilgrim Conference raises some eyebrows when they start off the season by beating three tough competitors in Harwich, Hanover (which is moving out of the South Shore League because its student enrollment is now too high) and, most recently, Norton.

In that last game, Cohasset edged the Lancers 64-63, winning on foul shots down the stretch. In a close game such as this one, every shot counts, and the Skippers were up to the challenge, hitting 21 out of 25 foul shots.

As a team, the Skippers have shot 81.7% from the line this season through the first three games, led by TJ Bilodeau who has hit on 19-20 attempts.

against the Lancers, the Skippers were paced by senior captains TJ Bilodeau (20 points, on 6-10 shooting from the floor, three steals) and Erik Shea (12 points and seven rebounds).

Sophomore power forward Ben Lynner dumped in 12 points to go with an outstanding four blocks. Junior point guard Matt Bilodeau, the third leading scorer on the squad this year, recorded 11 points with three assists.

Junior center Nick Bolster, starting varsity for the first time in his career, snatched up a team high eight rebounds.

With seven and a half minutes remaining in the game, with the Skippers ahead 43-41, the Lancers took advantage of the loose officiating and took out junior guard Liam Martin's legs. Landing on his back, Martin eventually was carried away on a stretcher with the use of a backboard.

Martin, also a big contributor on the football and track teams, has averaged 9.3 points per game this year, connecting on 13 of 16 field goal attempts.

Against Hanover, Cohasset jumped out to a seven point halftime lead en route to a 62-42 victory over the Indians.

Lynner recorded Cohasset's only double-double so far this year with 12 points and 11 rebounds.

Shea led the offensive charge with 17 points, while TJ Bilodeau added 15 with six assists and four steals.

Cohasset scored 10 fast break points in the first half, torching the Indian defense with dribble penetration and timely perimeter shooting.

One main force behind Cohasset's success this season has been their depth. Head Coach Ron Ford has said he feels comfortable putting any one of his players on the floor, not losing much from his first to his tenth player.

Cohasset's junior varsity program has also opened the season with three straight wins, including a decisive 85-71 win over the Lancers. Junior point guard Kyle Weber and freshman small forward Chris Bilodeau led the way in a game that featured the highest offensive output by a Skipper squad this year.

This upcoming week, the Skippers will be hosting the Annual Holiday Classic against Avon, Scituate and Dover-Sherborn. Last year, Cohasset finished second in the tourney, with a heart breaking 55-51 loss to Cardinal Spellman in the championships.

Also this week, there will be the Annual Alumni Game, where the current varsity team will try to match up with the All-Stars of the past like Paul-Michael Quinten, Jared Hardwick, Ryan and Peter Bishop, and Burke Davis.

Last year's contest ended with Hardwick connecting on two clutch free throws with ten seconds left to give the Alums a 91-90 win.

Game Notes

-In the JV's last game, Cohasset scored 47 second half points, more than the varsity program gave up the entire game in Hanover.

-The Skippers have scored 30% of their points this year on free throws.

-Cohasset recorded 17 steals against Hanover, four against Norton.

-From the end of the first half to the beginning of the second half of the Norton game, the Skippers made 13 consecutive foul shots.

-Against the Skippers, the Indians hit 7 of 9 foul shots in the first half, 3-of-8 in the second.

nothing but that against the Crusaders. Sheerin continued her scintillating performances with victories on the vault (a personal best 8.5), beam (8.9) and floor (9.0) on the way to capturing the all-around with a 34.5.

Meredith Bixby was second in the all-around with a 30.4. Bixby was second on the vault with an 8.1 and took third on the beam with her 7.6. Carlie Carter won the bars with an 8.4 and recorded strong scores for second on the beam (8.3) and floor (8.1). Norwell's Amy Maree had a career evening on the vault, posting a personal best of 7.8 for third. Maree was just one member of the Norwell contingent to post a best score.

Laura Good was right on Maree's heels on the vault with a personal best of 7.7 and Meredith Cammett's 7.6 floor mark was her best ever.

The meet was never close as the Skippers rolled out to an insurmountable 61.05 – 48.7 lead at the halfway point. Connerty knew Cohasset/Norwell had the meet wrapped up but she was concerned with the concentration factor from the half to the finish.

She needn't have overly concerned herself because the girls actually finished stronger with a 64.7 mark once the meet became academic. It's that kind of performance the Skippers will need against the likes of Hanover, and again on Jan. 11 against Hingham. The Indians defeated Hingham in their first meeting of the season but the Harbormen have an impressive 126 score on their 2000-2001 resume. The Skippers can't look past Hanover and there's no way they can coast against Hingham when the 11th rolls around.

"At this point, I'm just thinking of improving the girls' skill level," said Connerty. "We still have to become more consistent on the beam. Consistency on the beam, in any meet, plays a big role."

The Skippers haven't been playing any roles or acting this season, they are the real thing. What should make the remainder of the Pilgrim Conference race exciting is that Hanover and Hingham look to be the real deal as well.

Events of 2000 set the stage for Cohasset in the 21st century and deep caring for fellow man" as reasons for choosing him. Besides earning the nickname "Chatterbox," Chatterton was well-known for fund-raising activities and operating the concessions area at the South Shore Music Circus.

In an attempt to fully-fund the board's decision to add more paramedics to the town's fire department, selectmen vote to cut $30,000 used to pay the town's volunteer fire fighters, from the town budget. However, thanks to two petitions featuring the names of 500 town residents, the board backtracks and reinstates $15,000 for the call force.

The school committee has a bumpy month, as member Kathy Ofsthun announces she won't be seeking reelection, the committee announces a $180,000 shortfall in its special education budget, cuts the Osgood School technology aide and two Deer Hill activity aide positions from its 2001 budget. But the department did add three new teachers. The board decides to underfund the budget by $300,000, because of uncertainly in special education enrollment and state aide numbers. The budget is later fully funded in an October town meeting, with surplus free cash money.

On Feb. 18, a school bus slides into a tree on an icy Jerusalem Road. No one is seriously hurt.

Michael Sullivan, Leland Jenkins and Robert Sturdy all announce their candidacy for the open selectman's seat.

March

Town Meeting approves a $41.8 million school renovation and expansion project, $2.9 million renovation of the old Osgood School for use as a new town library, a zoning change prohibiting landfills in a zoning district off Route 3A, and a pay-as-you-throw system at the Recycling Transfer Facility.

A hearing about a proposed 180-foot tall cell tower on the Cohasset/Scituate line turned nasty.

The town announces it is taking over the school maintenance department, at a cost of $151,000 to the school department. The schools had looked into contracting it out, but the bids received were too high.

Burglars broke into the Cohasset High School nurse's office March 4, and stole 170 Ritalin tablets, with a street value of $5 each.

Selectmen refuse to reopen the village station debate saying it has already been down that road and has no interest in revisiting it.

Cohasset Heights Landfill owner Paul Barry proposes an end to his litigation concerning the closure of his landfill, providing he can operate an RTF adjacent to the site. The CHL negotiating committee turns down his offer.

Cohasset Middle/ High School principal Curt Collins announces he is retiring at the end of the year.

In a poor job of prognosticating, a majority Cohasset voters opt for Democrat Bill Bradley and Republican John McCain in the state's presidential primary. Neither are on the ballot in November.

April

Town voters choose Sullivan to replace Sullivan on the board of selectmen, and Rick Flynn and Charlis Tebbetts for the school committee. Spring elections see a 63 percent voter turnout. Residents also approve a Prop. 2 1/2 debt exclusion override in order to fund the $41.8 million school project, which had been given the green light at Town Meeting in March.

On April 7, for the second time in four months, the Abington Savings Bank inside Shaw's Plaza was robbed.

Contractors working outside the Red Lion Inn rupture a gas main, filling the building with gas, and causing the area to be evacuated. Electricity and gas are shut off to the area, but no one is hurt. Later that month, owner Gerd Ordelheide opens the doors to a nearly completely renovated restaurant and bar.

Ground is broken for the new water tank on Scituate Hill.

Cohasset lobstermen express concern over falling salinity levels in Cohasset Harbor because of the new sewer outfall pipe.

In a surprising move, the Cohasset Historical Society decides not to renew the development restriction on Moors Rocks off Jerusalem Road. However, neighbors join together and renew the restriction for 20 years.

In what would prove to be a completely unexpected headache, Selectman Merle Brown asks the board to consider creating two visitor parking spots on Government Island. The signs are shuffled from the sailing club to the pier to the harbormaster's shack, before complaints cause selectmen to give up the idea altogether in July.

May

The Cohasset Lobster Pound creates a stir by asking to move its operation to the Hagerty property off Parker Avenue, after Peter Roy buys the Mill River Railway property and tells them to vacate. Roy later has a change of heart and allows them to stay.

The Straits Pond Watershed Association announces the West Corner bridge is in need of repair. The announcement sets off a six-month investigation into whether Cohasset, Hingham or Hull owns the bridge, and which town is responsible for its upkeep.

The Lightkeepers Memorial is dedicated on Government Island, commemorating Joseph Wilson and Joseph Antoine who were killed in a gale while watching over the original Minot's Light.

After weeks of debate, selectmen heed neighbors' concerns, and add a number of restrictions onto the Red Lion Inn's liquor and entertainment license. It prohibits noise from being heard by neighbors, restricts hours of operation, and where people can drink on the property.

The town commemorates Memorial Day, by remembering the 50th anniversary of the Korean War.

June

The water department reveals that a high-level of a byproduct of the chlorination process found in the water, but insists it isn't a health risk.

Former village revitalization task force chairman Dean Rizzo appears before selectmen to discuss his involvement with the new non-profit, but privately backed urban planning group, the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation. He says the CRC's backers, Atlantica and Kimball's By the Sea owner Peter Roy, and Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordeleheide want to give a jump-start to the downtown and harbor renovation process. This organization would be the subject of more letters to the editor than any other town issue in 2000.

On June 4, Cohasset Police make the first crack cocaine bust in the town's history. On June 24, police arrest 10 motorcyclists for drag-racing along Jerusalem Road and Atlantic Avenue.

From June 9 to 10, the Cohasset Relay for Life raises more than $100,000 for the American Cancer Society.

After mitigation discussions start to gather momentum, the town is stunned when the MBTA decides to back away from the negotiating table. Talks don't start again in earnest until after a September meeting with Governor Paul Cellucci and Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan.

The South Shore Arts Center holds its 45th annual Festival on the Common.

October

Cohasset Harbor Marina owner Paul Trendowicz reappears before the ZBA to argue that his marina is a grandfathered non-conforming use, and is therefore entitled to zoning relief. The ZBA had ruled previously that Trendowicz violated zoning bylaws when he expanded his marina in 1999, though both the state and town building inspector had given him the go-ahead.

At the request of Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordeleheide, selectmen ease the conditions attached to his liquor and entertainment license. The board will later apply some of the Red Lion's conditions to all liquor and entertainment licenses.

The sewer commission appears before selectmen and announces that the sewer project is now $150,000 in the red, and an additional $500,000 in funding is needed to finish the project. Commission Chairman Gary Vanderweil said as of Oct. 1, he thought the project was in the black, but a few late-arriving bills quickly knocked it into the red.

State representative and state senate candidates squared off in debates sponsored by Community Newspaper Company. Republican Mary Anne McKenna and independent Walter Murray both criticized Democrat Garrett Bradley's massive fund-raising effort over the previous three years. State senate candidates James Cantwell and incumbent Robert Hedlund trade barbs.

A special fall town meeting breezed through a 29-article warrant in 90 minutes. But approved was the children's museum at the new library, Hagerty property redevelopment, departmental budget increases and the changing of the Government Island Study Committee to the Government Island Advisory Committee.

November

Bradley and Hedlund elected to represent the town on Beacon Hill.

Greenbush still grabs headlines

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

Greenbush has been at the forefront of issues in Cohasset for well over a decade now, and probably will be for the next decade.

The state-led movement to restore commuter rail service to the South Shore has resembled more of a roller-coaster than a diesel rail line. In the timeframe of 12 months, the project has gone from being pronounced dead, to Hingham signing a deal with the MBTA, to the MBTA refusing to negotiate with Cohasset, to the MBTA nearly reaching an agreement with selectmen.

Talks between Hingham and the MBTA had broken down with Hingham demanding a tunnel under Hingham Square. But on May 12, after a flurry of meetings, the MBTA agreed to construct an 800-foot tunnel in Hingham, as well as create a $1 million historic preservation trust fund, and Hingham signed on the dotted line.

After preliminary talks began in May, MBTA liaison Kevin Dasey came to Cohasset Town Hall one spring day and said the MBTA was pulling all of its mitigation offers off the table.

Among the 26 items Cohasset had asked for included quadrant gates throughout the town, a new fire station on the west side of the tracks, traffic flow redesign plans through the town and a $2.1 million preservation fund for historic properties.

Selectmen voted on July 3 to send a letter to Transportation Secretary Kevin Sullivan looking to clarify the current status of negotiations. In the letter, the board said the town was "dumbfounded" by the MBTA's actions and asked, "How is the town, which has historically taken a cooperative posture with the MBTA, in contrast to the direction taken by other towns, supposed to negotiate in good faith if the MBTA changes rules in mid-stream?"

One strategy to ensure the town's needs were met was redesignation of the town-owned rail bed as recreational space – a move that would necessitate a two-thirds vote from both sides of the state legislature to allow the state to take the land.

Greenbush has been at the forefront of issues in Cohasset for well over a decade now, and probably will be for the next decade.

Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, arranged a meeting for Cohasset and Scituate officials with Gov. Paul Cellucci that got the ball rolling again.

As the town prepared for its Sept. 19 meeting with Cellucci, the board dipped its toes into the murky water of establishing an official position on the train. An unofficial vote counted three-two against restoration, but all five insisted the focus should instead be on protecting the town.

Cellucci directed Secretary Sullivan and Department of Environmental Protection Secretary Robert Durand to forge mitigation agreements within the next 60 to 90 days. Though an agreement wasn't reached in that time frame, business picked up to the point where the town wasn't concerned.

"The mood of the talks certainly changed after the talks," Selectmen Chairman Thomas Callahan reflected last week.

"The thing that changed the attitude was when Sec. Sullivan came down and met with selectmen and expressed his interest in negotiating in good faith," added Tom Gruber of the mitigation committee. "It was the good faith that had been missing. Since we met, we've had a whole series of really good meetings, and gotten down to the wire with a package that seems quite reasonable in its general terms."

The meetings had gone so well, the town twice pulled articles from the special town meetings this fall that would have redesignated the rail bed, so as not to show any signs of "bad faith."

The MBTA had hoped the board would sign an agreement at its Dec. 12 meeting but selectmen balked, saying they remained concerned with some of the agreement's language and issues revolving around the town-owned right-of-way. They also said they refused to sign anything without it being circulated among town residents first.

"In reviewing it, there are still some issues we wish to discuss further," Callahan said at the time. "There was a certain push to sign it quickly, but there are still some issues we're going to deal with over the next couple of weeks."

Stay tuned.

Village effort sparks much debate

By Rick Collins
RICOLLINS@CNC.COM

This year's award for the issue that sparked the most Letters to the Editor goes to...The Cohasset Revitalization Corporation.

Not bad for a group that didn't even exist at the beginning of the year.

In just seven months, the non-profit group managed to spark harbor and village "revitalization" discussions more than any group that came before it, whether it was the Village Revitalization Task Force or the Village Renaissance Committee.

Originally backed by Atlantica and Kimball's By the Sea owner Peter Roy, and Red Lion Inn owner Gerd Ordelheide, the CRC formed to take the lead in improving the streetscape in the village, creating a formal walkway around the harbor, and burying the utility lines in both areas. However, the group's efforts, were met with resistance.

Some think the proposals are too "touristy." The word "Nantucketization" has become part of the town's lexicon, as some believe Roy and Ordelheide have ulterior motives, and want public money spent to make their businesses tourist attractions. Others believe Roy and Ordelheide are good neighbors, and are willing to spend their own money to make the town more attractive for everyone. Ordelheide prefers to call what he envisions doing as simply "sprucing up" the village area.

However, the revitalization effort hit a major speed bump earlier this month when Ordelheide announced he had left the CRC.

"There hasn't been enough town support," he told the Mariner that week. "All the townspeople must want what I give my money to, otherwise I'm not interested." He also said he was uncomfortable with the revitalization effort being led by a private group, rather than the town. "I just want to fix the street lamps, fix the sidewalks, make the gas station put a proper railing in, plant some trees. We don't need an organization to do it."

Ordelheide originally got involved with the effort in January, when then Village Revitalization Task Force chairman Dean Rizzo said both he and Roy had made a "substantial" donation to the effort. A week later, Rizzo and the town VRTF made a presentation to the Cohasset Chamber of Commerce's annual meeting, that outlined $14 million in improvements the committee was looking at.

However, the VRTF stalled shortly thereafter, and the next time Rizzo reappeared at a public meeting, it was in June when he told selectmen he had been named the executive director of the newly-formed private group. "It was formed as an independent entity that could carry the initiative along quicker than it would with the limited resources of Cohasset," Rizzo told the board that night.

When the new group opened its Elm Street office, most of the VRTF's goals had been adopted by the CRC, including the sidewalk in front of St. Stephen's Church on North Main Street.

"People can walk into the office, have a cup of coffee and say 'This is too ostentatious,'" said Ordelheide at the time. "We want more people in there saying, 'Hey, this shouldn't be this or that, but this makes sense.'"

Residents slowly began to express concern over whether the CRC had been given free reign to do whatever it wanted to the harbor and village areas.

"It's important to realize that they cannot go out and do [any improvements] on their own," selectman Michael Sullivan said at an August board meeting. "We're basically getting free planning."

Board chairman Thomas Callahan said the CRC will allow the town to get feasibility and cost analyses on long-discussed improvements such as, underground utilities and traffic flow throughout the village area.

Neil Glick of Spring Street reviews written comments made by visitors to the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation's open house with project architect David O'Connor of the Cecil Group.

The CRC, aided by some town funds that had been set aside towards engineering studies of the village, hired urban architects and engineers, the Cecil Group to lay the bricks for revitalization.

At a September public forum, the CRC and Cecil group held a brainstorming session of what town residents thought needed to be looked at. It also gave both Roy and Ordelheide the opportunity to once again say their only goal was to beautify the town, not make it a tourist trap. "That's why I renovated the Red Lion because I couldn't stand to look at it anymore. "I just want to clean the village area up and not make it something grandiose," Ordelheide told the crowd.

Callahan also said though selectmen will not just ok anything the CRC wanted, they weren't going to reject the group "out of hand."

But in October, 112 residents signed a letter addressed to the selectmen, questioning who was setting the agenda in the town. Again Sullivan said the group can't do anything without the consent not only of the selectmen, but without a Town Meeting vote.

A November forum on plans for the harbor met with more resistance than the village forum. The main focus rested on the creation of a boardwalk from Kimballs By the Sea, to Government Island.

"The harbor walk's already there," said Noel Ripley referring to the 'Captain's Walk' the historical commission established around the harbor 10 years ago.

A second forum on the village showed that whatever improvements are made, if any, would more than likely revolve around new sidewalks, and eliminating pedestrian safety hazards.

"Like a carpet that can tie a room together, sidewalks can tie a district together," Cecil Group founder Steven Cecil said.

However, despite the reduction in scale of the CRC's plans, and reassurances from town leaders that all proposals would face a full public town hearing, public skepticism, and cynicism, persisted.

That's where Ordelheide left. Though he said he is still willing to help pay for improvements to the village area, it won't be through a corporation, and not without a public consensus.

Rizzo prefers to look at the past-year from a glass-is-half-full perspective.

"I think [the CRC] has raised public awareness of many issues facing the village and harbor areas, as well as the work accomplished over the past four years by the VRTF and Cohasset Chamber of Commerce," he said. "Though I think there has been a lot of reservations expressed by many members of the community, I believe overall we've seen a consistent shift in the direction of the whole revitalization effort."

But Rizzo did echo what Roy said earlier this month, that the CRC will continue to hold public forums, but will also start to gauge public reaction to the group and its proposals. And unless, other members of the community can step forward and pick up some of the slack, the CRC will not continue as a one-man show.

"If the community is willing to get involved then Peter is committed to doing it, and the movement will continue on," Rizzo said.

While Ralph Dormitzer and his wife Jacqueline, of South Main Street agree the village needs improvement, they think the CRC lacks "contextual basis" for its decisions.

"They seem to come at [revitalization proposals] from the wrong perspective," said Dormitzer. He said revitalization efforts involving the harbor and village need to be led by town citizens who have spent their entire lives in Cohasset and understand both the historical aspects of the areas. "The first set of slides they put up used as a basis for their changes on safety," he said, adding one thing Cohasset is not, is unsafe.

"They should be worrying about making the town look better, but not worry about safety."

Selectmen Fred Koed has a busy month in the public eye. He returns from Palm Beach County, Florida, where he served as the head clerk for the Democratic Party in that county's presidential recount efforts. He then was named one of the state's 12 electors as part of the Electoral College.

Cohasset Conservation Commission rules it does have jurisdiction over CHL, but refuses to take any action over reports of lechate seeping from the landfill. Both CHL and water commissioner John McNabb claim victory.

Ordelhide resigns from the CRC, but says he still wants to make improvements to the downtown area.

Selectmen announce town is close to inking a mitigation agreement with the MBTA.

A month after the CHS auditorium's stage rigging is replaced, Superintendent Dr. Edward Malvey, announces the auditorium will be closed for the majority of the school renovation project, slated to break ground in March.

The power of herbs

Acupuncturist promotes health and prevention through innovative book

By Seth Jacobson
SJACOBSO@CNC.COM

If your new year's resolution has to do with taking better care of yourself on a holistic level, Marshfield resident Louis Vanrenen can help.

Vanrenen, 49, a local herbalist and acupuncturist, said his recently-published book called "Power Herbs: A Practical Guide to 50 Healing Herbs From the East and West," is a manual dedicated to improving health through holistic means.

"People used to think of herbal medicine as primitive folk medicine," Vanrenen said. "Now many doctors in the medical industry are discovering that there are actually many healing components to various herbs around the world."

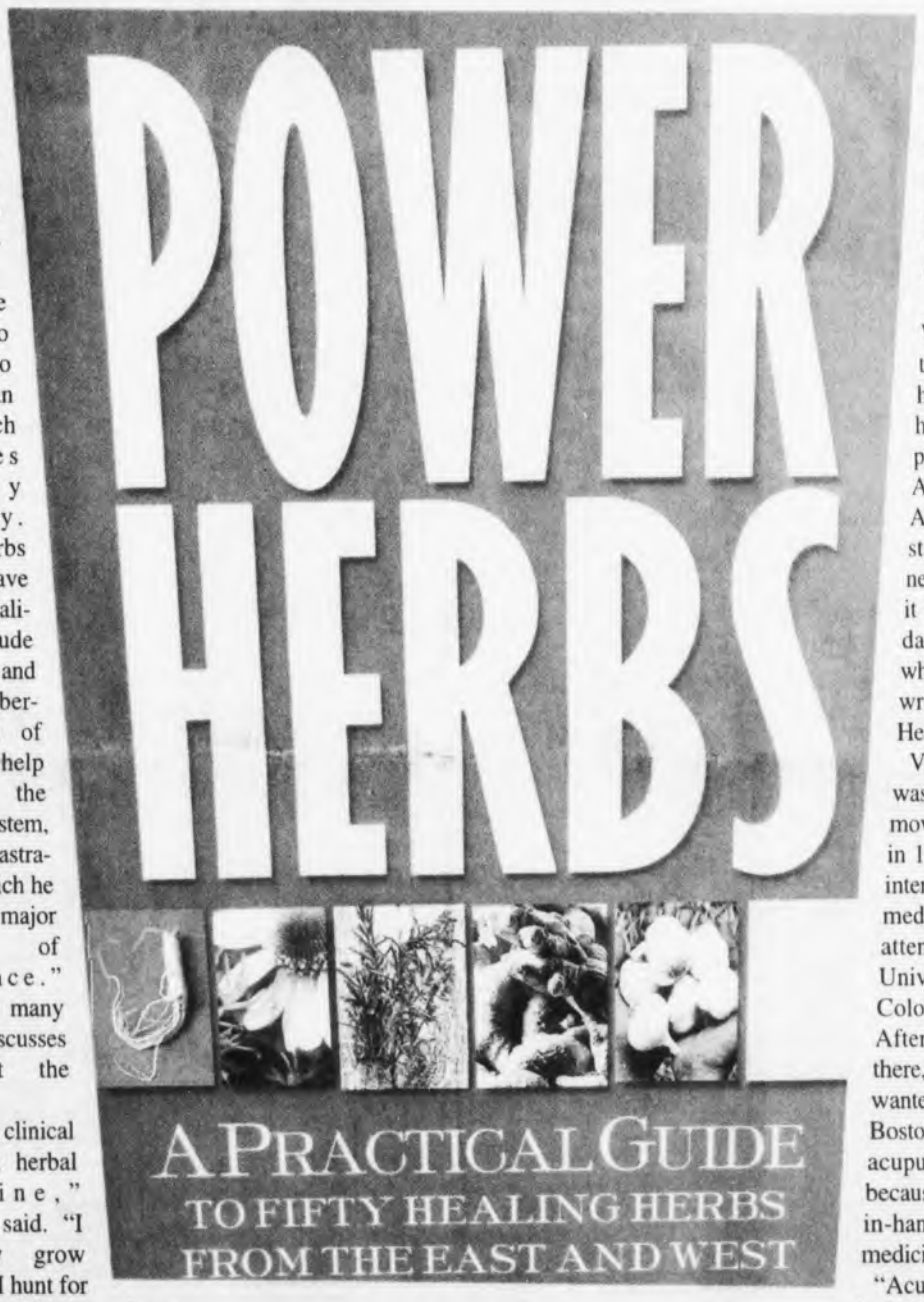
"I have a clinical interest in herbal medicine."
Louis Vanrenen

Vanrenen said his book is basically about health promotion and disease prevention through taking nature's medicine. He talks about 50 different herbs within the pages of the book, and he writes about their uses and their given histories.

Vanrenen cited a number of different "healing herbs" he talks about in the book and some of the ailments they are used to treat. For instance, he mentioned the popular favorite called St. John's Wort, and herb which remedies depression and anxiety.

He referred to Ginko Biloba, an herb which increases memory capacity. Other herbs he said have healing qualities include Echinacea and also elderberries, both of which help boost the immune system, and also "astragalus," which he called "a major promoter of endurance." There are many more he discusses throughout the book.

"I have a clinical interest in herbal medicine," Vanrenen said. "I not only grow herbs, but I hunt for them in different places around the world, and I study them as well. One of my hobbies is traveling to jungles and forests and looking for healing plants."



Vanrenen said he's traveled to places like the Caribbean, Asia, Europe, Central America, and all over the United States for the sole purpose of finding and studying healing herbs.

"In the near future I will actually be traveling to the South American rainforest to study rare medicinal plants," he said. "One of those in particular is called 'Cat's Claw,' and herb which boosts the immune system and could possible help with the prevention of diseases like AIDS and cancer."

When Vanrenen is not traveling abroad, he's working at his Hanover practice called American Acupuncture—he started the business in 1983, and it was his day-to-day activities which led him to writing "Power Herbs."

Vanrenen, who was born in Africa, moved to America in 1957. He became interested in holistic medicine while attending the University of Colorado in 1976. After he finished there, he decided he wanted to move to the Boston area and attend acupuncture school because it went hand-in-hand with holistic medicine.

"Acupuncture an herbal medicine were always used together in the Orient," he noted. He added he practices what he preaches—in his clinic, Vanrenen always uses acupuncture and herbs together.

Vanrenen moved to Watertown and attended the New England School of Acupuncture. After he finished there, he involved himself with a "couple of internships" around the area before moving to the South Shore in 1983 to start his own practice.

By 1990, Vanrenen decided he wanted to start writing a book about herbal medicine. When he finally finished the book, he sat on it for eight years before it was actually published late in 1999.

"I finally hit pay-dirt when my agent got a contract with Putnam (publishing)," Vanrenen said. "And they were actually very excited about publishing the book."

"People are starting to understand how useful herbal medicine is."
Louis Vanrenen

These days, his business and his book are both extremely successful and Vanrenen believes that's because holistic medicine is making waves all around the country. Vanrenen said because of all the hype, he is even working on a new herb book which he described as "more comprehensive" than "Power Herbs." The book will be called "Green Medicine, Green Planet" and it's due out sometime in 2001.

"People are starting to understand how useful herbal

Condo sales were up in 2000

First-time buyers attracted by lower price

While detached single-family home sales were down from year ago levels in every region of the state during the third quarter, sales of condominiums improved in several areas, the Massachusetts Association of Realtors has found.

Condo sales rose modestly over last year in the central part of the state (up 0. 5 percent), west (up 6.5 percent) and southeast (up 9.3 percent) regions, with slight declines reported in all other areas.

"First-time buyers are eager to get into the market, but their ability to save for a down payment has been hampered by the high rents they have had to pay and the recent slide in stock and mutual fund values," former MAR President Fred Meyer said.

"As a result, many are now turning to the less expensive condo market to buy their first home."

Meanwhile, trade-up buyers also showed some hesitation during the summer buying and selling months at entering the market, with many having

WEDNESDAY, DEC. 27

This is a day to finish old business, handle routine chores and errands, clean up and reorganize. The Capricorn moon becomes inactive at 5:52 a.m. until 4:25 p.m., when an Aquarius moon takes over. Take it slow and easy this evening; don't make waves. There is a rough spot in effect between 7:50-10:50 p.m., when the moon and Mars align. Give others lots of freedom and space.

THURSDAY, DEC. 28

An Aquarius moon all day may point you in directions you do not normally travel. Be open to new ideas and willing to try new experiences. All group efforts, community endeavors, team sports get the green light. You can be most productive if you work with others to achieve a common goal; brainstorm, network, collaborate.

FRIDAY, DEC. 29

A 90-degree contact of Venus and Saturn takes center stage today. This alignment culminates at 5:35 p.m. In addition, the Aquarius moon interacts with Venus and Saturn until 6:47 p.m., when it becomes inactive. Sidestep feelings of self-doubt, fear or frustration. Go out of your way to pacify loved ones. Be more forgiving, loving, nurturing. Instead of worrying about situations that are out of your control, focus on matters you can do something about. Hard work and commitment will pay off.

SATURDAY, DEC. 30

The moon enters the last sign of the zodiac, Pisces, at 5:27 a.m., traveling there throughout the end of this year. Today the moon interacts with Jupiter in the morning and Mars in the afternoon. Creativity and artistic sensitivity are at an all-time high. Create or appreciate music, art, photography, dance. Sleep on new ideas and don't take action until next year.

SUNDAY, DEC. 31

A 90-degree alignment of the moon and Pluto warns you to avoid morning hassles or the blues. Focus on the positives and count your blessings. The moon continues to travel in the sign Pisces all day. In addition, an applying 90-degree alignment of Mars and Neptune makes this a holiday weekend to kick back, relax and mellow out completely. Take quiet time out for yourself; reflect on and learn from past experiences. Strive for greater spiritual vision.

MONDAY, JANUARY 1, 2001

The year 2001 brings its share of exciting planetary alignments. There is one period I find most interesting. Mars (the action planet, the ancient god of war—it represents struggles within and with others) will travel in retrograde motion May 11 - July 19. This turbulent period will peak in June, when Mercury turns retrograde opposing Mars. It is a time to cool out, slow down, back up, reflect, reconsider, regroup.

This year begins with tranquil planetary vibrations. The planet Mars forms a 90-degree alignment to Neptune at 12:02 p.m. In addition, the Pisces moon becomes inactive at 6:36 a.m., traveling at the tail end of the zodiac until 5:14 p.m. Rest, relax, enjoy. An Aries moon arrives at 5:14 p.m., bringing an energy boost. At 9:20 p.m. the moon aligns with exuberant Jupiter, setting the stage for holiday evening parties.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 2

Planetary action this week rates high for productivity. Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished. An Aries moon generates high energy, ambition. The green light is on for new beginnings across the board. Get back on track with diets and exercise programs. The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 5:31 p.m. A full moon/lunar eclipse culminates in a week, January 9. The next eight days will be action-packed.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 3

An Aries moon continues to set a quick pace. Sidestep impatience, irritability. Use common sense. Channel high energy constructively. Tackle jobs that require physical labor and exertion; finish old business, handle routine matters. New starts are off limits, because the Aries moon becomes inactive at 5:09 a.m. for the remainder of the day. The planet Venus moves into Pisces at 1:14 p.m., remaining there until February 2.

Welcome the incoming tide of 2001.

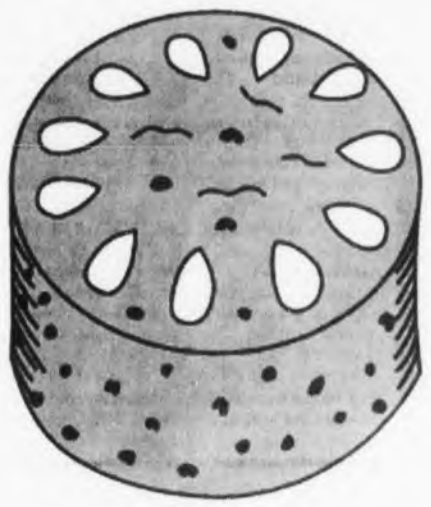
Fallen chocolate cake



Every restaurant dessert has its life cycle. At least it seems that way to those of us who have lived through the birth and formative years of the emerging American restaurant scene. We survived the terrible twos, when cheesecake was ubiquitous; we made it through the awkward adolescence, when crème brûlée, like a body-pierced teenager, was disfigured with ingredients such as ginger and raspberries; and now we have arrived at young adulthood, featuring "fallen chocolate cake," an undercooked-in-the-center mound of intense, buttery chocolate cake, which ranges from a dense, brownielike consistency to something altogether more ethereal.

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Because this recipe concept encompasses a wide range of styles, from half-cooked batter to a chocolate sponge cake, my first step was to organize a tasting to decide exactly what I was looking for. I made three variations: the Warm, Soft Chocolate Cake from Jean-George's Vongerichten; Fallen Chocolate Cake from Olives, created by chef-owner Todd English; and a recipe I published in this column two years ago entitled Chocolate Soufflé Cake.

My recipe was quite delicious and like a soufflé in texture, but it lacked the intense whack of chocolate and the rich, buttery texture of the other two desserts. The recipe from Olives was the heaviest of the lot, very good but quite similar to an undercooked brownie. Jean-Georges' cake was the tasting panel's favorite, with the most intense chocolate flavor, a relatively light texture, and a very runny center. I then wondered if I might be able to capture some of the ethereal lightness of my Chocolate Soufflé Cake along with the rich taste and buttery mouthfeel of Jean-Georges' dessert.

First I had to decide on the basic preparation method. There were two choices: I could beat the egg yolks and whites separately and then fold them together, or I could beat whole eggs and sugar to create a thick foam. The latter method proved superior, as it delivered the rich, moist texture I was looking for while also simplifying the procedure. That left me with a recipe that called for melting chocolate; beating whole eggs, sugar, and flavorings into a foam; and then folding the two together, perhaps with a little flour or ground nuts for extra body.

My next step was to determine what amounts of each ingredient made the best cake. After considerable testing, I decided that one-half cup of melted butter made the dessert considerably more moist. Some recipes use no flour or very little (Jean-Georges, for instance, uses only 4 teaspoons); I finally settled on 2 tablespoons. The amount of chocolate was key and highly variable, running from a mere 4 ounces to a high of 12 ounces in Todd English's recipe. Eight ounces provided a good jolt of chocolate without being overbearing.

The eggs, however, were perhaps the most crucial element. I tested 6 whole eggs (light and airy sponge-cake texture), 4 whole eggs plus 4 yolks (moist and dark), and the winning combination of 4 whole eggs plus 1 yolk (rich but light, moist, intense, and dark).

When baking these desserts in ramekins at 450 degrees, as called for in the Jean-Georges recipe, I found that the tops burned slightly and the center remained a bit too runny. At 350 degrees, the dessert took on a more cakelike quality and was also drier. Four hundred degrees was best, yielding a light, cakelike perimeter around a moist well of intense chocolate. (When using a cake pan rather than ramekins, though, I found it best to set the oven at 375 degrees.)

Finally, I wondered if most folks have the eight ramekins needed for single-portion cakes at home. I could find only four, the others lost to breakage and my children's craft projects. Consequently, I developed variations using both 8- and 9-inch springform pans (cake pans with removable bottoms can also be used). As an added benefit for the home cook I discovered that in cake form this dessert can be baked up to one hour before serving and will remain warm right in the pan. (In a pinch, this dessert can be held up to two hours in the pan, but it will become slightly more dense as it cools.)

INDIVIDUAL FALLEN CHOCOLATE CAKES

You can substitute 5 ounces of unsweetened baking chocolate for the semisweet if need be, but you'll also have to increase the sugar by 6 tablespoons, for a total of 7/8 cup. To melt the chocolate and butter in a microwave oven, heat chocolate alone at 50 percent power for 2 minutes; stir chocolate, add butter, and continue heating at 50 percent for another 2 minutes, stopping to stir after 1 minute. If chocolate is not yet entirely melted, heat an additional 30 seconds at 50 percent power.

8 tablespoons (1 stick) unsalted butter, plus extra for greasing the ramekins

8 ounces semisweet chocolate, coarsely chopped

4 large eggs

1 large yolk

1 teaspoon vanilla extract

/teaspoon salt

fi cup sugar

2 tablespoons all-purpose flour, plus extra for ramekins

Confectioners' sugar or unsweetened cocoa powder for decoration, optional

Whipped cream for serving, optional

1. Adjust oven rack to center position and heat oven to 400 degrees. Generously butter and flour (you can substitute cocoa powder) eight 6-ounce ramekins or custard/baking cups; tap out excess flour and position ramekins on shallow roasting pan, jelly roll pan, or baking sheet. Meanwhile, melt butter and chocolate in medium heatproof bowl set over a pan of almost simmering water, stirring once or twice, until smooth; remove from heat. (Or melt chocolate and butter in microwave oven. See instructions above.)

2. Beat eggs, yolk, vanilla, salt, and sugar at highest speed in bowl of a standing mixer fitted with whisk attachment until volume nearly triples, color is very light, and mixture drops from beaters in a smooth, thick stream, about 5 minutes. (Alternatively, beat for 10 minutes using a handheld electric mixer and large mixing bowl.) Scrape egg mixture over melted chocolate and butter; sprinkle flour over egg mixture. Gently fold egg and flour into chocolate until mixture is uniformly colored. Ladle or pour batter into prepared ramekins. (Can be covered lightly with plastic wrap and refrigerated up to 8 hours. Return to room temperature for 30 minutes before baking.)

3. Bake until cakes have puffed about fi inch above rims of ramekins, have a thin crust on top, and jiggle slightly at center when ramekins are shaken very gently, 12 to 13 minutes. Run a paring knife around inside edges of ramekins to loosen cakes and invert onto serving plates; cool for 1 minute and lift off ramekins. Sieve light sprinkling of confectioners' sugar or cocoa powder over cakes to decorate, if desired, and serve immediately with whipped cream, if desired.

Serves 8

SINGLE CAKE VARIATION

One large fallen chocolate cake can be prepared in either a springform pan or a cake pan with a removable bottom. Do not use a regular cake pan, as the cake will be impossible to remove once baked. Though the cake is best when served warm, within about 30 minutes of being unmolded, it can be held in the pan for up to 2 hours before serving.

Follow recipe for Individual Fallen Chocolate Cakes, substituting an 8- or 9-inch springform or removable-bottom cake pan for ramekins. Decrease baking temperature to 375 degrees and bake until cake looks puffed, a thin top crust has formed, and center jiggles slightly when pan is shaken gently, 22 to 25 minutes for 9-inch pan or 27 to 30 minutes for 8-inch pan. Cool cake for 15 minutes, run a paring knife around inside edge of pan, and remove pan sides. Sieve light sprinkling of confectioners' sugar or unsweetened cocoa powder over cake to decorate, if desired, just before serving, and serve warm, with optional whipped cream. Serves 8 to 10 medicine is," he said. "But like other forms of medicine, herbs need to be used with respect. One of the things I mention in the book is that herbs are not for everyone. What people need to realize is that regular medicine needs to be respected—I have a great respect for it. Don't go get yourself some herbs when you have heart problems. You need to go to a doctor. Herbal medicine can only take care of so much. Western medicine is great for emergencies whereas holistic medicine is great for preventing illness and promoting health."

But even though holistic medicine and western medicine are two different entities, Vanrenen said both methods are starting to intersect to some degree.

"I think professionally, we're starting to see the use of more herbal medicines," he said. "I think some doctors are starting to see how herbal medicine can really compliment regular medicine."

"People used to think of herbal medicine as primitive folk medicine. Now many doctors in the medical industry are discovering that there are actually many healing components to various herbs around the world."

Marshfield author Louis Vanrenen

Customers are starting to see it that way as well. Vanrenen said at his practice, his customer base ranges from elderly people who come in to get help for their chronic pain to younger people who find themselves stressed out or run down.

"Herbs can be used to treat a lot of things," Vanrenen said. "In the past few years, the sale of these natural plants has skyrocketed. It seems like people are finally discovering their value. If they are used correctly, herbs can really help people."

Vanrenen's book "Power Herbs" is available at Amazon.com, but he said it is also available at Barnes and Noble book stores around the area, and also at American Acupuncture at 171 Rockland Street in Hanover.

State and Maine (B+)

Making a movie on remote must be a pain: getting the locals to gawk less and cooperate more, securing official permits, in Massachusetts paying off the Teamsters union (alleged) extorters, unruffling as many special interest feathers as possible, getting in and out with a minimum of fuss. Doing a film in small-town Vermont is the framing device of "State and Maine"; trying to shove oversized egos into manageable boxes is the film director's task; keeping up the frenetic pace, a la "The Man Who Came to Dinner," is the real screenwriter's chore. The result may strike some as precious, as a Christopher Guest-like venture that misses by inches. Here it comes off as frequently hilarious, if at times a stretch.

Rebecca Pidgeon and Philip Seymour Hoffman go over a script in "State & Maine."

William H. Macy, with a master's touch on the nerve ends of exasperation, stars as the director, who has been obliged to leave another small town officially owing to difficulties in logistics but actually because of the taste for 14-year-old girls of the star, Bob Berrenger (Alec Baldwin), America's number one matinee idol. Well, everybody, as Bob says, more than once, needs a hobby. As if this weren't enough, the movie, titled "The Old Mill," needs an old mill, and the town lacks an old mill, which disorients the screenwriter (Philip Seymour Hoffman), an underappreciated playwright — underappreciated except by the town bookstore owner (Rebecca Pidgeon), who is engaged to an up and coming crafty politician (Clark Gregg), whom she soon loses interest in as the screenwriter captures her affection, which puts the now spurned fiancé into a snit, which he transforms into a vendetta against the movie company.

More: The town mayor (Charles Durning) has a social climbing wife who becomes consumed by a projected dinner party for the movie's leading lights, a project that, in expected madcap movie tradition, is doomed owing to a fluke. A local teenager (Julia Stiles) is too delicious for Bob to resist, and the producer (David Paymer) has to contend with the fruit of this infelicity, but with what? How will he extricate his priapic star from his irresistible temptations? How will the director convince the female star that baring her breasts is an act of dramatic integrity, not of prurience? How will our morose, wistful, insecure screenwriter reconcile his commitment to art with the demands of Mammon?

"State and Maine" never quite condescends to small-town America but doesn't turn it into a New England Brigadoon either. Nor do the locals emerge as rubes, also not as fonts of downhome wisdom, even though we have two laconic geezers spouting obvious truisms as philosophical dicta. The pace, which should be unrelentingly swift, gets pokey now an then and tugs the movie downward, though it bounces right back. More likely to become a cult fave than a box office biggie, "State and Maine" has charm and verve to spare.

Cast Away (A-)

Robinson Crusoe, Daniel Defoe's unforgettable castaway, had more imagination and more resources and decades more years on his island than Chuck Noland (Tom Hanks, sure to be nominated for an Oscar), the clever but exasperated protagonist of "Cast Away," and ultimately Crusoe had a human friend, Friday. Noland has a volleyball whose white surface he marred accidentally with a bloody hand, then fashioned that print into a face, which became a companion, a thing to talk to, a device to let us know Noland's thoughts without resorting either to voice-overs or to watching him talk strictly to himself. Much of "Cast Away" is a risk, straddling the even thinner line between poignant drama and dark comedy. The movie works both owing to Hanks' internally driven, flawless performance and to a screenplay that shows us enough and tells us enough without getting its priorities wrong.

This film does something I don't recall any other fictional movie doing: using a real airline as that which suffers a fatal crash. It's FedEx, rarely transporting passengers — Noland is a FedEx executive who trots around the globe troubleshooting — but it's what we transport our things on, and pilots fly it. The movie starts fast in Moscow, where a FedEx package is delivered to Noland and his Russian workers in 86 hours, which puts him into a well-rehearsed tirade about to laggardliness of the system there. He says: "We're two minutes late, then tomorrow it'll be four minutes, then eight, and then before you know it we're the United States Postal Service!"

Noland goes home to Memphis, reunites with his girlfriend (Helen Hunt), then breaks away from a holiday celebration with friends to set off on an emergency flight for his company. The plane crashes. Noland and some FedEx packages survive and the adventure begins. Hanks gradually shucks most of his clothes, and he's out of shape, belly bulging, overfed, spoiled (like most of us), entitled. The movie gives him plenty of time to learn to cope: to open coconuts, to make fire, to utilize some of the stuff in the washed ashore FedEx packages to tie things together, cut things, even knock out an abscessed tooth.

Time passes, four years, and Noland is now lean, bearded, shaggy, his eyes are dim; he has become accustomed to what he is almost sure will be his fate: years on that island and then death. I couldn't help thinking of Richard Hatch, the "Survivor" character known as the "fat gay guy," who in his short time on that hokey island adventure lost some weight and ran around naked — and won. Audiences are going to find that image flashing into their minds.

Noland makes an escape effort and fails. Then another. And he must accept realities that he never conceived of as his lot in life, realities that showed him that sometimes one's destiny is to live no matter what the circumstance and to come to terms with loss and (here comes the cliché) move on.

Not heeding every word of P&S can be costly

By Anthony Summers
CORRESPONDENT

Although there may be so-called Standard Form Purchase-and-Sale Agreements, there are very few standard purchases. In the Supreme Court case of Wojtkun v. DeWolfe New England and Gibson, the buyer discovered the importance of fully understanding the so-called standard purchase-and -sale agreement.

Background

On or about Jan. 26, 1990 Peter Wojtkun, the plaintiff and buyer, entered into a purchase-and-sale agreement (P&S) with Richard and Mary Gibson, the defendants and seller, to purchase the property located at 302 High St., Andover.

The P&S was captioned "Standard Form Purchase-and-Sale Agreement." A $10,000 deposit was paid by the buyer and held in escrow by DeWolfe New England, the co-defendant, one of the two brokers in the transaction The closing was set for Aug. 1, 1990.

The P&S also contained a not-so-standard provision which read that the buyer's obligation is "expressly contingent on the buyer obtaining a variance from the town of Andover to allow him to use the property as dental offices." This provision required the buyer to file an application within 30 days and "to pursue the application with due diligence and in good faith."

The provision went on to read that if no zoning variance is issued on or before June 1, 1990, then at the buyer's option the agreement would be terminated.

The P&S also required that the buyer shall apply for a $165,000 mortgage loan and if, after using due diligence, the buyer fails to obtain a written commitment on or before 45 days after receipt of a zoning variance, then at the buyer's option, the deposit would be refunded and the agreement would be terminated.

Finally, there was a provision which stated that "any notice to be given hereunder shall be in writing and signed by the party or the party's attorney and shall be deemed to have been given to each party when hand-delivered, mailed by registered mail or faxed to the buyer with a copy to his attorney or to the seller's attorney, as the case may be."

Well, the buyer never obtained a variance on or before June 1, 1990, because upon his application with the town, he was advised that he would be denied because of the retirement of a board member. Realizing that it would be impossible to obtain approval by June 1, 1990, he did not reapply. Without the variance, buyer concluded he was not obligated to pursue a mortgage. In fact, the buyer even verbally informed the seller's broker that he could not obtain the variance and therefore could not purchase the property.

Finally, on Aug. 1, 1990, the closing date, when the buyer did not purchase the property, he was unpleasantly disappointed since the seller refused to return the deposit.

Analysis and decision

It is an elementary rule in the interpretation of contracts that whenever reasonably practical, every word shall be given effect. It must be presumed that words have been employed for the purpose of expressing the intent of the parties." Although this P&S stated that failure to obtain a variance by June 1, 1990 gave the buyer the option to terminate, there was no wording to describe how the buyer's option to terminate would be exercised.

However, the agreement did describe how and to whom notice was to be given. Strangely, there was no requirement in the P&S that the buyer give written notice of termination.

Oral notice to the broker does not satisfy the notice provision. Also, the P&S required the buyer to pursue the variance in good faith and with due diligence. The Bbuyer opted not to file his application when he was informed of a potential problem because of retirement of a board member.

The P&S suffered from a major drafting omission. Neither the variance contingency provision nor the mortgage contingency provision required written notice by the buyer. These provisions did grant the buyer the option to terminate if not successful.

Here the Court supplied the requirement that the buyer should have provided written notice of termination and failure to provide written notice was fatal to the buyer's claim. Further, the "due diligence and good faith" clause required more of an effort from the buyer in his aborted variance application. In this case the sellers prevail and will retain the buyer's $10,000 deposit.

Legal advice

The buyer apparently did not clearly understand his obligations under the P&S. His case failed in two respects: he did not prove he acted with due diligence in his variance application, and he allowed contingency deadlines to pass without written notice as set forth in the agreement. He obviously did not understand the meaning of those crucial provisions in his so-called standard purchase-and-sale agreement.

expressed concern over assuming a new mortgage at a higher rate than they now hold, the MAR concluded.

"When interest rates jumped over 8 1/2 percent for a 30-year fixed loan in May, that caused many current homeowners to rethink their decision to move up. Consequently, the trade-up market was less active than normal over the first half of the summer," Meyer said.

One positive result of the more tempered sales pace is the partial replenishment of market listings that has occurred since last year, the MAR said.

After sharp inventory declines of 22 percent and 17 percent in the first and second quarters of 2000, the number of single-family homes for sale was down 9.1 percent from the third quarter of 1999 (30,569 compared to 33,646).

"The shift to a less frenetic sales pace should be good for buyers in the long run because it will take some pressure off prices. But, as of now, housing supply has not yet sufficiently increased to meet demand in most markets," Meyer said.

The MAR report confirms this observation, with statewide average selling prices up sharply across the residential market.

Specifically, the statewide average selling price for detached single-family homes has increased 17.3 percent in the last year, from an average price of $256,407 in the third quarter last year to $300,730 in the same three-month period in 2000.

Double-digit price gains also were reported in all but two regions — the southeast and west — where average prices rose 0.2 percent and 2.5 percent respectively.

Similarly, the statewide average selling price for condominiums climbed 16.4 percent this past year, from an average of $161,396 in the third quarter of 1999 to $187,912 in the comparable quarter this year.

Most regions saw prices appreciate steadily in the summer quarter, but average selling prices decreased slightly, 1.6 percent in southeastern Massachusetts and 4.5 percent in the state's four western-most counties compared to the same period last year.

Along with a tight supply, higher average selling prices also reflect a significant increase in the sale of expensive luxury and second home properties throughout the state.

The MAR data show sales of upper-end homes priced at or above $500,000 rose 41.3 percent in the third quarter of 2000 over the same period a year ago, while the sale of low to moderately priced single family homes and condos of $300,000 or less declined 15.7 percent in the same period.

This dichotomy clearly points out the need for more affordable starter homes that will open doors into housing for entry-level buyers," Meyer asserted. "The construction of smaller single and multi-family homes is vital to keeping this market strong."

IN BRIEF

John Fridlington appointed new EVP of MAR

John Fridlington

At a special meeting, the board of directors of the Massachusetts Association of Realtors (MAR) unanimously approved John Fridlington, CAE, as the association's new executive vice president. The appointment of Fridlington concludes a five and one-half month, nationwide search to fill the MAR's top staff executive position and makes him just the fifth person to hold the title of EVP since 1950. He is expected to join the association Jan. 2.

A Certified Association Executive (CAE) who holds a law degree from the University of Notre Dame, Fridlington possesses extensive association management experience, having held five positions with the California Association of Realtors (CAR) since 1978. Most recently, he served as vice president of the CAR executive department from 1998 to 2000, where he was responsible for managing key leadership groups and directing program outreach and services to state's 123 local realtors associations. In his 22 years at CAR, Fridlington also served 10 years in the CAR legal department, including five years as senior legal counsel, and was a vice president of local association services for nearly three years.

As MAR executive vice president, Fridlington will oversee the effective implementation of all association activities and services in accordance with the MAR business plan, provide advice and counsel to the group's 16 local associations of realtors, and manage the association's finances in conjunction with the MAR secretary/treasurer. In addition, he will help develop the association's goals, objectives and related policies, act as a MAR spokesperson, coordinate and supervise the activities of MAR's professional staff, and serve on the MAR Executive Board and New England Realtors Committee.

On national level, Fridlington has served on the National Association of Realtors (NAR) Association Executives Committee (AEC) and is a past chairman of the NAR's AEC Strategic Planning Subcommittee and RCE Certification Board. Additionally, he is a current member of the American Society of Association Executives' Legal Section.

Organized in 1924, the 15,000-member Massachusetts Association of Realtors is a professional trade organization which provides programs and services to meet the business interests of real estate licensees and also represents the private property rights of Massachusetts' residents in legislative and regulatory matters. The term realtors is registered as the exclusive designation of members of the National Association of Realtors who subscribe to a strict code of ethics.

Area residents complete real estate course

Several area residents recently completed a five-week course on the fundamentals of real estate sales at the CEConway Country School of Real Estate.

Graduates included James M. Bond and Pauline M. Rockwell of Hanover; Catherine Baker and Jackie Kleinz of Cohasset; Philip R. Oakman, Loretta Smeed, and Kristen Hay of Marshfield; Jennifer McGrath and Gayle M. Serino of Kingston; Joseph T. Mullen and Patricia A. Murray of Rockland; Melissa McAdam of Pembroke; Michael D. Students of the ŒConway Country School of Real Estate also have access to professional career counseling to discuss joining the Conway sales team, although enrolling in the pre-licensing class does not obligate students to work for Conway. Tuition is $180 and the classes are held at the Hanover Campus (at the intersection of Routes 53 and 139) on Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m. The next class starts on Feb. 6 and runs through March 8. Performance raises $12,000

A sold-out crowd helped raise more than $12,000 for two charitable groups at a recent holiday performance of Charles Dickens's "A Christmas Carol."

The Nov. 30 show, held at Norwell's Company Theatre, was hosted by Jack Conway & Co. with proceeds benefiting the MainSpring House homeless shelter and The Charity Guild food pantry.

The real estate company also donated tickets to the residents and staff of Conway House, a shelter for mothers and children operated by the parent organization of MainSpring House. Approximately 15 families and staff members were among the 360 people who attended the event, which included a pre-show reception and a visit from Santa Claus.

"This was a wonderful show, and we really are glad everyone had such a good time," Chairman Jack Conway said after the performance. "The Company Theatre did a magnificent job making the Charles Dickens story come to life."

Conway also thanked several local businesses who donated items for the event, including: On Rye Deli, Cheers Liquors, Sprints Photo Studio, Stop & Shop, Compass Group/Eurest Dining, Encore Catering, Seasons Catering, Horizon Beverages, Churchill Linen, North River Party Rental and Sysco Foods.

The Brockton Coalition for the Homeless operates MainSpring House in Brockton, which provides shelter, food, educational programs and counseling to individuals and families in need. MainSpring houses as many as 60 homeless individuals per night; Conway House in Middleboro provides shelter for 13 homeless families in a residence on East Grove

It receives no state funding and pays for its programs through the generous contributions of its members, area residents and local businesses.

Commonwealth program recognized

The state of Massachusetts is one of seven honorees recognized by the Trust for Public Land (TPL), a national land conservation organization, for leadership in smart growth.

"The Community Preservation Act is an outstanding example of bringing public awareness and resources to guiding growth and preserving community character," said Whitney Hatch, director of TPL's New England offices.

The Community Preservation Act, which was signed into law in September 2000, is an innovative bill enabling communities to raise new funds — and access state matching funds — for land protection, historic preservation and community housing projects.

TPL's Greenprint Gallery 2000 honors:

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts, where the Community Preservation Act has combined housing, historic preservation, and open space protection.

Broward County, Fla., where voters approved $400 million to buy some of its last remaining open space and convert previously developed areas to parks.

Gallatin County, Mont., where a ranching community voted to approve funding for a Purchase of Development Rights program (PDRs).

The states of Illinois and Missouri, where voters approved funding for the first ever bi-state local parks district and its centerpiece — a 40-mile riverside park on both sides of the Mississippi.

Gwinnett County, Ga., where the state and county partnered to protect green space through local financing and state matching funds.

The state of Ohio, which voted to fund conservation and urban revitalization by linking brownfield restoration and protecting suburban greenfields.

Westchester County, N.Y., where rapid growth galvanized seven towns to support open space preservation.

Last November voters approved 172 of 205 conservation ballot questions, providing more than $7.4 billion in new funding for land conservation. In most of these referenda, voters approved tax increases.

"The states and counties we are recognizing are inspiring examples of ways to protect important natural resources, provide parks and open space for the public and avoid sprawl," said TPL President Will Rogers.

The Trust for Public Land was founded in 1972 to protect land for people to enjoy as parks and open space. Nationwide, TPL has protected more than 1.2 million acres, including nearly 60,000 acres in New England. TPL launched its "Greenprint for Growth" campaign last year to conserve land as a way to guide growth, protect air and water, and ensure a high quality of life in communities nationwide.

For more information, call TPL's Boston office at (617) 367-6200.

Details of all seven honorees are featured in Greenprint Gallery 2000 on the Trust for Public Land's newly redesigned web site at www.tpl.org.

Conway Commercial sells historic site

Paul Durgin, vice president of Conway Commercial, recently brokered the sale of the Burton Homestead property in Pembroke to the Rockland Trust Company. Durgin represented the owner, Bradford Simmons, and procured the buyer for the site, which sold for $435,000.

Located at the intersection of Routes 14 and 36, the structure was built in the late 1700s. In 1807, the house was expanded and a general store was opened at the site. Most recently, the property was used as a professional building, with residential apartments on the second floor. At the request of the Pembroke Historic Commission, Rockland Trust is preserving the original structure, relocating it on the lot, and converting it to a bank branch.

Conway Commercial is a division of Norwell-based Jack Conway & Co. Founded in 1957, Conway is the largest independently owned real estate firm in Massachusetts, with more than 600 agents in 37 offices from Boston to Cape Cod. The organization recently was named the 77th largest realty company in the United States by REALTOR® Magazine, the official publication of the National Association of Realtors.

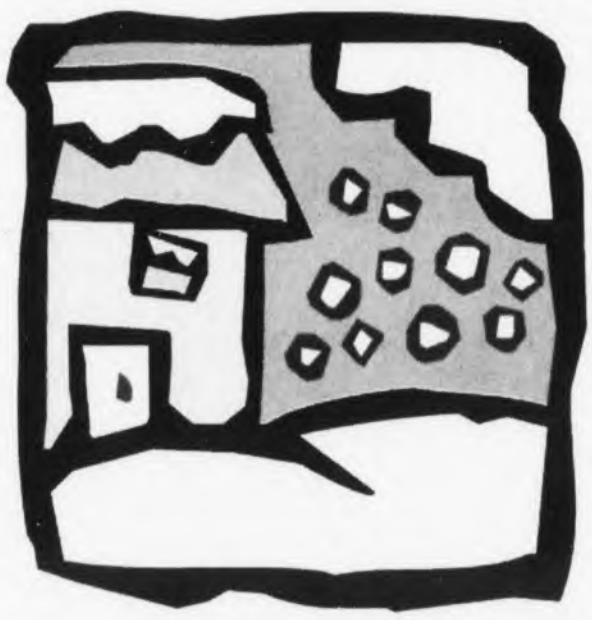
Tips for preventing frozen water pipes

Water pipes and meters can freeze, expand and burst during the winter months. Frozen pipes and meters can damage homes and be inconvenient and expensive to repair, but can safeguard against problems. It is vital that homeowners inspect their homes and businesses for potential trouble areas. Problem areas may include:

- Water pipes passing under a broken or open window
- Separation between the foundation and floor joints or cracks in walls near pipes
- Inadequately insulated water pipes in an exterior wall
- Water pipes subjected to freezing temperatures in unheated rooms
- Pipes in an unheated basement.

Five simple actions can help prevent water meters and pipes from freezing:

- Insulate water meters. Construct a foam box around the meter and fill it with crumpled newspaper. Wrap insulated material around pipes near the meter.



If you have an outside meter, make sure the lid is not broken and that it is properly insulated. Unheated indoor meters should also be insulated.

- Insulate pipes. Protect pipes in unheated parts of the home, including crawl spaces. Wrap the pipes with rags, blankets, or commercial wraps.
- Open doors under the sink. If a sink is located against an outside wall, open cabinet doors to allow warm air to reach the water pipes.
- Eliminate drafts. Seal crawl space vents and broken windows. Close basement doors and windows tightly. If you leave home for a few days, turn your furnace down to a lower setting, but don't turn it off.
- Drain water lines to outside faucets, irrigation lines, and showers.

It is also a good idea to locate your indoor shut-off valve and to tag it so that you can locate the valve quickly in an emergency. Should a pipe freeze, do not attempt to thaw it with an open flame, as it could start a fire. Instead, use hot air from an electric hair dryer, hot towels, or heat tape. Never leave a hair dryer running unattended.

Packages for mature travelers

Ask George

By George Hobica
COPLEY NEWS SERVICE

Q. I'm a single traveler in my 60s, and I'd like to go someplace warm and cheap, preferably using a package deal that doesn't have a single supplement. Can you recommend something suitable?

A. Saga Holidays' new Resorts and Stays packages offer mature travelers the chance to get away for as little as $73 per day, combining a wide variety of activities, from golf and tennis to sightseeing and cooking classes. Ten of 16 packages feature no single supplement for solo travelers.

Among the packages for 2001 are: seven-nights in Scottsdale, Ariz., starting at $599; 15 nights in Marbella, Spain, or the Amalfi Coast, Italy, from $1,099 or $1,399 respectively, and 13 nights in Borneo from $1,699. All of Saga's Resorts and Stays programs include round-trip airfare, accommodations, and, depending on the package, may include meals and excursions, transfers, insurance and more.

For more information, call (800) 921-9291, or visit www.sagaholidays.com.

Q. Can you recommend an inexpensive hotel on Maui? We're planning on staying about a week.

A. Aston Maui Islander is offering great rates for stays through Dec. 22, 2001. Rates start at $84 per night for guests staying four nights or more, and for travelers aged 50 and up. If you stay fewer than four nights, the rooms cost $99 per night. American Automobile Association members can get nightly rates starting at $75. Children under 18 stay free and, if you stay for six nights, you get the seventh night free.

The Aston Maui Islander is located in Lahaina, and sits on 10 acres of land with low-rise Hawaiian-style accommodations. Amenities include a pool, sun deck, lighted tennis courts, barbecues and family picnic areas.

For reservations, call (800) 367-5226. You can visit www.aston-hotels.com for more information.

Q. I'd like to go somewhere in the Caribbean where I can really get away from it all - "it" meaning television, the phone, the Internet and computers.

Is there a resort that's on a nice beach that doesn't have TVs, phones or high-speed Internet connections in their guest rooms?

A. One suggestion is Caneel Bay on the idyllic island of St. John in the U.S. Virgin Islands. The resort was originally designed for people like you who want to truly "unplug" and, today, now that there are more things to unplug than ever, it's an especially welcome concept. Although otherwise luxurious, the rooms have no phones or TVs. Free high-speed Internet access is available in a room off the lobby if you succumb, and there are TVs in one of the restaurant/bars.

Caneel also offers a few very rustic cabins and campsites in the National Park, which makes up most of the island of St. John (campsites cost about $25 a night). There are seven white-sand beaches in the resort - one for every day of the week.

For more information, call (888) 767-3966 or contact your travel agent.

Q. Last year, I saw an article about cruises on freighters that would take maybe 10 people. You live and dine with the crew and visit the ports while the freighters unload. I don't remember the booking agency and thought you might have that information.

A. Here are two resources for you: Freighter World Cruises, 180 S. Lake Ave., Suite 335, Pasadena, CA 91101-2655, (800) 531-7774; or visit www.freighterworld.com, or TravlTips, P.O. Box 580188, Flushing, N.Y. 11358, (800) 872-8584 or visit www.travltips.com. Both specialize in booking freighter cruises.

George Hobica

To give you an idea of costs, a 66-day cruise on the Blue Star Line from Savannah, Ga., through the Panama Canal, then to New Zealand and Australia, then returning to Philadelphia costs as little as $5,100 single occupancy, or $4,300 double occupancy.

Have a travel question? George can be reached via e-mail at georgehobica(at)aol.com, or by writing to this newspaper.

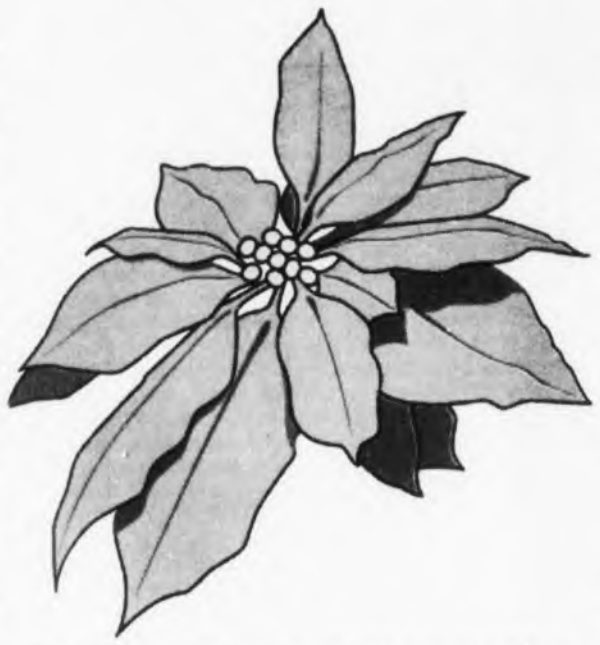
Prolong the beauty of holiday plants

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Sleet and freezing rain pelts against my windowpanes as Mother Nature delivers yet another winter storm to the South Shore. Although the prospect of a white Christmas is appealing, I dislike wintry weather. Our continuous periods of fierce winds, chilly temperatures and frozen ground have created the impression that winter arrived long before its official due date but the passing of the winter solstice and the shortest day of the year is always a positive landmark for this passionate gardener who thrives on sunlight and already yearns for the advent of spring.

Despite my indifference to house plants in recent years, I purchase several holiday plants each December as they are among the easiest and most attractive solutions for instant holiday decorating. Healthy plants, whether grown for their flowers or foliage, can serve as important elements of a successful interior design and traditional holiday plants purchased as decorations or received as gifts can continue to furnish beauty for months or years to come if provided with minimal care.

Poinsettias (Euphorbia pulcherrima) are perhaps the most popular of holiday plants, their brightly-colored flowers making an elegant display which may persist for weeks and months after the holidays. Their colorful flowers are actually highly colored leaves or bracts with the true, tiny, insignificant yellow flowers located in the center. Although poinsettias prefer moderately bright light, they will tolerate rather low-light conditions. The soil should be kept moderately moist so they should be watered when the surface feels dry to the touch, taking care not to allow the bottom of the pot to sit in water. They prefer cool temperatures and should be protected from drafts. Occasional fertilizing will help to maintain the rich, deep green foliage.



Once the bracts of my poinsettias fade and the plants decline, I tend to discard my plants, but for gardeners who enjoy a challenge, it is possible to grow and flower these plants for years. When their flowers fade, cut back the foliage to 6 inches and keep the soil barely moist. Repotin spring and once the weather is warm outdoors, move to a bright but shaded location in the garden. Bring the plant back into the house in September giving it bright light and ample water. The plant must have 12 to 14 hours of uninterrupted darkness each day for up to 10 weeks to initiate flower buds. Move plants to a closet at night or grow in a room or porch that is never used in the evening, for even small amounts of artificial light may prevent flowering.

The so-called "Christmas cactus" (Schlumbergera bridgesii) is a leafless plant which has flat jointed stems with scalloped-margined branches. In recent years, a very similar plant, sometimes referred to as the "crab cactus" or "Thanksgiving cactus" (Zygocactus truncatus) has become more popular and more widely available. It features similar leafless segments but these tend to be wider, more rigid and upright with long, pointed tooth-like projections. These plants are epiphytes or plants which in their native jungle environment grow in trees suspended off the ground with their roots exposed to air. Consequently, they prefer a quick-draining, soilless mixture and like to be pot-bound with their growing medium kept evenly moist. Grow in bright light. They enjoy spending the summer outdoors in a bright but shady garden. In fall, they should be brought back into a cool, frost-free porch, garage, or cool room with evening temperatures in the 50s and require short day length in order to set flower buds. These are excellent plants for those who want a low maintenance houseplant. Mine bloom year after year and thrive with little or no attention.

Every few years, I succumb to the beauty of at least one cyclamen or shooting-star plant. This plant is particularly fond of cooler environments tolerating temperatures as low as the mid-40s. The charming butterfly-like flowers range in color from white through rose, pink, salmon, scarlet and lavender and may be single, double or even fringed. Flowers may continue to open for up to four months on a happy plant. Their heart-shaped leaves are equally attractive, having silver and white mottling on a dark green background. Plants must be kept cool, moist and shaded from the sun. When the flowers fade, the plant, which is actually a tuber, should be allowed to rest by gradually withholding water until the foliage dies. Move outdoors in summer to a shady location keeping the soil nearly dry and the pot resting on its side. Repotin September with the tuber level with the surface of the soil.

To ensure the survival of houseplants during the winter months, protect your plants from cold drafts and hot air from heaters. Provide supplemental humidity by placing pebbles in a tray or saucer beneath your plant or misting the foliage weekly as our indoor environments tend to be very dry during the winter months. Grouping plants will also help to increase the humidity level. For passionate gardeners, maintaining a healthy collection of indoor plants during the dormant months helps to satisfy our need to work the soil. Happy holidays to all!

Happy New Year!
